Now don’t think we didn’t have anything else to do. . .

Editors’ note: Sometimes we make up stuff for our April Fool’s edition every year. But to fill the ‘Letters’ page, we don’t have to. These are real letters—honest—that we really received from people who really wrote them and were really serious about what they had to say. The letters are printed exactly the way they were written, except that the names of the writers have been withheld, which we thought was a really good idea.

Dear Dragon,

HELP! I really need some help, on a problem. I’ve been a DM for almost a year, I’ve created my own world, my own monsters, my own spell books, and all that stuff. But there’s one thing that I just don’t know how to create, er . . . roll up. Death. I know this sounds funny, but I need your help.

Would you give me the statistics for Death? (Please, oh Please, oh Please!) Like how many hp Death has, what magic powers it has, what does it have magic powers or does it have spells or what. I’d be really thankful if you helped out.

Dear Dragon,

I have an evil wizard named Casimir who has a ring of regeneration. If he cut off his finger which has the ring and he didn’t die would the finger grow a new body? If so could he create an army of clones that would do what he says? P.S. Casimir is about to become the new Blue Dragon Highlord (taking Kitiara’s place after she dies) so you better start printing his statistics.

Dear TSR,

A friend and I while arguing a point while elves or dwarves have better eye sight. (Now don’t think we didn’t have anything else to do although we really did not). Went to a friends house to see what race indeed had the better eye sight and also to see who was going to make fun of the other over this whole issue. I don’t know how we did it but we kind of stumbled on an idea for a game system and we decided to take this idea (me and my other friends) and take it further well any ways the idea is still here floating around and we still don’t know who has the better eye sight elves or dwarves. Well the purpose of this letter is to ask you if you are really interested in an idea for a game system that might be a little expensive but we really think it would sale if given the chance. If you find time in you’re busy schedules please write back to me at the address which is at the bottom of this letter. Oh and if you can also be so kind as to answer the question that we are all urging to find the answer to (which race has the better eye sight Elves or Dwarves?) we would really be happy.

Dear Dragon,

In one of my adventuring groups I have a magic user (level 35) that wants tenth level spells and I have allowed this by making the most powerful spell Genie’s Wist which is where you cast it properly there are no ill effects to the caster (but 20% chance it will have ill effects on the wisher, the magic user cannot wish). I have also placed other limits including cannot have more then one tenth level spell at a time, takes 1 full day to memorize but they still abuse it. Can you give me some advise other than getting rid of tenth level magic all together?

Dear Dragon

What happens to pc that have a baby?

To whom it may concern:

I’ve created a do it yourself dance course viz: If You Can Read, You Can Dance. Its so simple, a teenager can learn.

I’m looking for a publisher to buy it out right. Millions can be made if advertised on T.V.

I shall send a section of my dance course, and a comparative competitor’s version to prove the simplicity of mine.

Dear Dragon,

I am a big fan of Drizzt Do’Urden’s! I myself feel he is the best swordsman, not only in the FORGOTTEN REALMS® setting, but in all of the other campaign settings as well! I have a friend who strongly disagrees with me! He is a big fan of Rikus, from the DARK SUN® setting! He seems to think that Rikus, in battle with Drizzt, would kill Drizzt! Now I’m pretty sure most people will agree with me when I say, “No man or woman is a match for the whirling scimitars held by the mighty Drizzt Do’Urden!” (I’m sorry Mr. Greenwood but I dont think even the great Elminster would have a chance!) So it would be appreciated if you could please answer my dilemma so I could shut my friend up once and for all!!

Now don’t think we didn’t have a question about an article or have an idea for a new feature you’d like to see? Women on the Verge

...but as a writer one has to take the chance on being a fool...
Yes, to be a fool, that perhaps requires the greatest courage.

Anne Sexton

When Dale asked me to write an editorial about women and role-playing games, that little voice inside my head was saying, “No, don’t do it, you’ll only set yourself up for criticism.” It took the better part of my day, paging through back issues of DRAGON® Magazine, to read all the letters from women in the “Forum” section. Women seem to have a lot of complaints as well as compliments about role-playing games. True, we are less likely to buy products with scantily clad women on them, after True, we are less likely to buy products with scantily clad women on them, after all, not all of us are shaped like Playboy centerfolds. And yes, we sometimes get outraged when we see women who are supposed to be warriors wearing next to nothing. But aside from those issues, many women enjoy role-playing, run their own game campaigns, work in hobby shops, and write fantasy, science fiction, and horror stories and novels.

I never realized that some women felt alienated and discriminated against until I began reading their comments. The abundance of letters clearly shows that female gamers are not a rarity. Women who want to get involved in RPGs but can’t seem to find anyone interested should start their own campaign, post flyers on bulletin boards at the local college or university, or ask friends if they would be interested in playing. Most college campuses have gaming clubs and people of all races, creeds, and colors participate.

Equality is an issue in everything these days. People shouldn’t expect to be treated differently simply because they’re female, African-American, skinny, or have purple hair. We all have to learn to look past our differences, and understand that no one is being singled out because of some minor difference. The idea behind any game is enjoyment and imagination. If a company’s product or ideas anger you, write a letter to the company know. Voicing your anger leads to change, and the best way to achieve any type of equality is to let your voice be heard and don’t let the big boys intimidate you. Discrimination is sad regardless of where you find it, but it is simply a fact of life and something that we must deal with. If you feel like you’re being left out on game night maybe it’s because people don’t think you’re interested. Let them know that you are, and it’ll open up a whole new world of adventure. If gaming sessions turn into the dating game, speak out—don’t assume they know, or that they act that way because you’re female. Don’t play up the differences, stick to the similarities, because you don’t have to be one of the guys to enjoy the game.

I read a letter (in issue #177) from a woman who said that her mere presence generated stares in a comic-book store. In my own experiences, I have never run into any problems in comic/hobby shops. Most people welcome new players and are more than happy to teach them the rules. The easiest way to overcome your fears is to just jump in and play. Sit in on a few sessions until you get the hang of it, ask questions, and become involved. You’ll make some great friends and have a good time. Guys, keep in mind that the women in your role-playing group are not there to be picked up, they want to play the game. Becoming a good role-player has nothing to do with gender.

At one time there was a lack of strong fictional female characters. Lately it seems that the media is picking up on this and is portraying women in a new light. Just tune in to Star Trek: Voyager or The X-Files, rent videos like Aliens or Terminator 2. When I was growing up the only fictional females I wanted to be like were Princess Leia and the Bionic Woman. When I was in college I discovered the comic book, Grendel. The main character, Christine Spar, was a single mom, and an independent, strong woman (she also kicked some serious butt!). Now, young women have a wide variety of fictional females to base role-playing characters on.

Other examples of strong female characters can be found in TSR, Inc., products. The DRAGONLANCE® Saga has Goldmoon and Cymbeline, and The Simbul (Queen of Aglarond) is just one of many influential women of the FORGOTTEN REALMS® setting. Granted, you may have to search for fictional role models, but women have not been passed over, and the gaming world is slowly realizing this. I’ve noticed that more women role-play now than ever before. Maybe it’s because of the growing number of women writers or the fact that a variety of games are now available to suit almost everyone’s needs. I know a group of women who play West End Games’ STAR WARS® RPG very week, and others who play White Wolfs VAMPIRE: THE MASQUERADE® game. Men also are becoming more open to the idea of women gamers (if they weren’t already). Games are meant to bring individuals together, not separate them.

Women need to discover their own voices, and not just in fantasy, science fiction, and horror. Women writers are growing in numbers, and the majority of them are excellent story tellers. If you want to write, pick up a copy of Writing a Woman’s Life by Carolyn G. Heilbrun, it will point you in the right direction. I love opening the mail here and finding an adventure proposal or letter from a woman, I only wish that more women would write. It is difficult to stand up and be heard in a man’s world, but with support and effort it can be done. Please start writing and playing! Our road to equality is not paved, but we can make it smoother as we travel.

Prepare for Havestri:

Battle of Bones and the Hill of Lost Souls reveals the unknown dangers of travel to these famous battlefields...and the haunts of the undead. These are revealed in Elminster's Ecologies Appendix One, written by Elminster himself!
You kids have got it easy! In my day, when we wanted to game we had to walk 20 miles, uphill both ways, in the pouring rain, through the bad part of town, until we came to only hobby shop within 100 miles that carried role-playing games. Then, if we knew the secret password, they'd let us in and maybe, just maybe, the owner would let us look at the games instead of having his gorillas beat us up and throw us out in the mud.

Well, alright, maybe it wasn't that bad. I mean, I never actually got beat up by gorillas. But the fact remains that these days, it's not too hard to get involved with role-playing games. After all, they're on the shelves of almost every major bookstore or well-stocked hobby dealer. Many schools have RPG clubs and games like the MAGIC: THE GATHERING® card game have introduced large numbers of people to the concept of fantasy games. When I started gaming, this just wasn't the case.

Like a lot of people in those days, I got involved in gaming after I discovered that I could routinely beat everyone in my family and chess club at Risk. "There must be more," I thought, "for a would-be global despot to do with his time."

Somewhere, don't ask me where, I had stumbled across mention of something called war games, I didn't know what they were, but they sounded like a step in the right direction. Determined to make something of myself, I sought out the largest hobby store in the area and boldly stepped in.

Only then did it dawn on me that I really had no idea what I was looking for.

I flagged down one of the fellows working behind the counter and asked him about war games. I suppose that I half-expected him to laugh at me or throw me out of his shop. Self-confidence was not my big thing in those days. To my surprise and delight, he did neither. Instead, he introduced himself (his name was Rob Caswell) and asked me if I'd ever heard of role-playing games. I said no, we struck up a conversation, and before long I found myself invited to attend a gaming session the very next day. Not knowing that it would change my life forever, I thankfully accepted.

I arranged for my father to drop me off at the game. I told him that I'd call him when I needed a ride home and knocked on the door. To say the least, I was very nervous about meeting a whole bunch of new people.

To my surprise, everyone was friendly and eager to welcome an outsider into their long-established group. (It wasn't until later that I learned the truth of the matter: they had started gaming exactly one week before!)

The game of the day was a brand new release from Fantasy Games Unlimited called the STARSHIPS & SPACEMEN® game. As an avid reader of science fiction, I was delighted.

The referee, a fellow by the name of Larry Smith (not the one who works for DRAGON® and DUNGEON® Magazines), was an incredible game master. To this day, I haven't met his like. He was able to incorporate countless elements from books, television shows, and movies without blinking. I found myself running a vulcan armed with a variable sword and wearing the same powered armor I'd read about in Robert Heinlein's Starship Troopers.

It was all there, everything that I'd read about and dreamed about for years! The only difference is that I was writing the story. My decisions were vital to the outcome of the story. It was incredible.

Years (and countless games) later, I still remember the details of that game as if it had happened only yesterday. We were exploring an alien base in the Altair system that was loosely based on the Krell city in the movie Forbidden Planet. The main difference was that this place was dangerous! I found myself cutting down triffids with my variable sword and carefully outwitting infrared-targeting automated lasers. There were lots of logic puzzles to solve, bad guys to zap, and treasures to be claimed.

Finally, we decided that it was time to call a halt for the day. I looked up at the clock and saw that it was 4 o'clock in the morning. The game had started at noon and it seemed like we had only been playing for an hour or two.

Larry offered rides home to those of us who were too young to drive and half an hour later I was back home. My father was still awake, watching TV, and about as mad as I'd ever seen him. Only then when I remembered that I'd said I would call when I needed a ride home. He'd been up all night waiting for my call and I had forgotten all about it.

I tried to explain, but it didn't do much good. My father and I didn't get along so well in those days. His final words on the matter were "You'll never do that again!"

I spent the next few days trying to soothe dad's ruffled feathers and eventually managed to get his initial decision reversed. When next week's game rolled around, Sub-Commander Pa-Kur was there, ready to rock.

I think I knew from that first game that this was going to be more than a hobby to me. Indeed, of the five or six people who attended that game session, three of us have gone on to publish gaming material. Larry did some work for FGU, Rob has done art for GDW's TRAVELLER®, West End's STAR WARS®, and other SFRPGs, and I'm with TSR, Inc., now.

I'm sure there's a lesson in proper parenting and discipline somewhere in this story, but I'm just not sure who it's for—me or my father.

Through special arrangement with Bargle the Infamous, renowned self-made archwizard, the BeB Magic Company presents the gift for the adventurer who has everything: Limited edition sets of the most popular magical rings and books to spring from his singular genius.

"Available now is The Bargle Magical Ring Collection: Series One and The Bargle Magical Ring Collection: Series Two. Each set of five rings comes in a handsome, silk-lined oak box that complements any trophy chamber. Only 50 sets will be produced, at which point the secrets to their creation will be destroyed.

Each ring is individually numbered, and the first 25 orders will receive a Pamphlet penned by Bargle himself that describes the rings in detail.

"Also available are collector's editions of Bargle's best-selling self-help books. Social Advancement Through the Selective Use of Charm and Disintegrate Spells, Bringing Out the Wizard in You: A Twelve Step Program, and The Adventurer's Companion: The Do-It-Yourself Indestructible Spell Book, are all available in limited runs of 150. Each volume is autographed and hand-numbered by Bargle himself. As an additional bonus, the limited editions of Bringing Out the Wizard in You and The Adventurer's Companion contains spells that are being made available to the public for the first time!

"To order, or for additional information, contact your local geased BeB Magic Company representative at the address on the bottom of this leaflet. Please allow six weeks to six months for delivery on the Bargle Magical Ring Collections. Books will be delivered in six to ten weeks. Rush deliveries, teleported straight to your hometown in two weeks, are available for all items. Ask our local representative for details."
Background

In the final days of 1010 AC, Bargle the Infamous left his post as magist to Baron Ludwig von Hendriks, taking with him the baronial treasury. The cunning wizard had long since seen the proverbial writing on the wall, and when Hendriks was defeated by forces of the Five Shires, Bargle took the opportunity to move on to bigger things.

Shortly before the outbreak of the Great War that ravaged the Known World, Bargle had enjoyed some financial success by mass-producing self-help books on a magical printing press of his own design. Using the money stolen from the treasury, he founded the BeB Magic Company in Darokin City and hired several wizards as assistants to try the same approach with magic rings and rebound left-over series cost 6,000 gp extra. It is therefore possible for the characters to encounter certain Bargle rings as part of a defeated villain’s treasure.

Rings

The gargle Magical Ring Collection:
Series One sells for 66,499 gp and Series Two sells for 54,199 gp. (“You couldn’t get it cheaper if you raided a treasure hoard!”) However, as is true with all collectibles, price doesn’t necessarily reflect utility.

Each ring has a serial number between 1-50 engraved on the inside, as well as other engravings as noted. If a PC purchases or otherwise acquires a complete set, each ring in that set will bear the same number. It also is possible for characters to encounter rings of any type with no marks at all—Bargle had made several before coming up with the gimmick of limited-edition runs.

For purposes of dispelling, the rings from the Bargle Magical Ring Collections range in effectiveness from 18th to 27th level (1d10 + 17). 18th level represents the least powerful of Bargle’s assistants, 27th level is Bargle himself. Rings in a set were not necessarily enchanted by the same wizard, so the DM must roll individually for each. Special conditions are noted in the descriptions.

Set #1

Invisible ring: This plain gold band is inscribed with the words “Invisible Ring!” When worn, it becomes invisible. That’s it, Sparky. The ring has no enchantment after malfunctioning. Note: One in six of the collector’s edition rings of fashion are faulty, due to their rushed production. Faulty rings have a 5% chance of dressing the user in a garish jester costume that lasts for 1d4 rounds. It then vanishes, leaving the wearer stark naked. Whatever clothes that were worn (including magical girdles, boots, cloaks, hats, etc.) are lost forever. Small pieces of jewelry, such as rings, are not affected. The faulty ring loses its enchantment after malfunctioning.

Ring of destruction: This iron ring inflicts 1d6 points of magical damage per hour on the wearer until dead. Once death has occurred, the ring continues to inflict damage until the subject is at -20 hit points, at which time the corpse turns into a fine, chalky powder. Nothing short of a wish can restore the individual to life if this occurs. A dispel magic or remove curse cast at any level is the only way to neutralize the ring of destruction before the body becomes dust. Cost: 30,000 gp.

Ring of ideas: Made from tempered steel, the ring of ideas enables the user to focus his mind (with a successful Intelligence check) and come up with an excellent idea (provided by the DM) relevant to the situation at hand. It has six uses. Cost: 8,000 gp. Note: The ring of ideas is the most unreliable of all items created by Bargle. Each time it is invoked, there is a 5% chance the user will be confused and feebleminded, as per the wizard spells. Only cure all or wish can reverse the effects.

Ring of circular curses: This ring is usable only by spell-casting characters. A single band looped twice and inscribed with “Power to Curse;” it lets the wearer cast curse 1d4 times per day. However, the curse will affect the caster as well as the target. Cost: 50,000 gp.

Ring of gender confusion: This gold ring, set with a large red stone is inscribed with “It’s a Question of Self-Image.” When it is put on, the wearer thinks his sex has been changed to the opposite gender. However, this is just a delusion (as per the potion); those around the wearer will correctly claim that she is the same gender as always. The effected character will remain firm in his (her?) belief until subjected to a successful dispel magic. Cost: 10,000 gp.

Ring of impact: This brass ring gives +1 bonus on the wearer’s attack and damage rolls during hand-to-hand punching attacks. It also gives +1 to the target’s knock-out check. (The optional hand-to-hand combat rules can be found on page 111 on the D&D® game’s Rules Cyclopedia.) Cost: 15,000 gp.

Ring of kindness: This unadorned tin band causes the wearer to become kindhearted to a fault. He will release prisoners, sell his property and give the money to a nearby orphanage or an unscrupulous character with a phony tale of woe, and other acts of excessive kindness. A special version of charm person, the ring’s effect lasts 1d40 days minus the wearer’s level, on a failed saving throw. The character is affected for 1d40 hours minus his level if the save is successful. Dispel magic negates the effect. Upon recovery, the victim is likely to seek out whoever offered him that ring, hoping to take his losses out of the individual’s hide. Cost: 5,000 gp.

Ring of languages: This platinum ring is engraved with the words “The Gift of Gab.” The wearer can understand, read, write, and speak any language known by any creature within 60’ of the ring. Cost: 5,000 gp.

Note: The limited edition variety of this ring also has a 10% chance of functioning as a ring of truthfulness, due to the rushed process of creating them. This secondary function is undetectable by analyze or identify.

Books

BeB touts Bargle’s self-help books as the best-selling of their kind. This claim is true, as they are the only ones of their kind. No other mage would be brazen enough to put into writing how he rose from orphaned street urchin to powerful wizard without ever setting foot inside a magic school.

BeB salespeople point out the beautiful binding of the limited edition volumes, (“It’s genuine synthetic dragon hide!”) and mention the critics that commented on the 1004 AC mass-market editions.

Each book is 8” X 11” and costs 15,000 gp. Page counts for individual volumes are given in the descriptions.

Bringing Out the Wizard in You: A Twelve Step Program (“A masterpiece!” raved Otkel Shadowchaser of the Alphatian Book Review): This 196-page book is part autobiography, part practical guide for working-class people trying to balance the day-to-day struggle of survival with magical studies. Using his own life-experiences as examples, Bargle provides an excellent series of stepping stones for the dedicated and talented peasant who’s really a mage at heart.

Note: The limited edition of this book... includes Bargle’s first original spell, interpret writings. This 1st-level spell is a combination of read magic and read languages, and was created by Bargle soon after he stole his first magic primer at age 14. This less-than-successful reinvention of the wheel is only effective 50% of the time, whether cast on magical or non-magical script.

Social Advancement Through the Selective Use of Charm and Disintegrate Spells (“The most significant work since Marl’s ‘Enter the Purple Worm’,” said A. Otto Erol of the Glantrian Free Press): This 253-page book details how a mage might elevate himself from lowly hedge wizard to king and beyond. The author’s preface states it is a philosophical work, intended to alert rulers to what a magist might be doing in the dark—not to inspire said magist to plot against his master. Nonetheless, this book was banned in Alphatia, Thyatis, and Wendar. On the other hand, in Glantri, Bargle was awarded an honorary degree from the Great School of Magic.

The Adventurer’s Companion: A Do-It-Yourself Indestructible Spell Book

(“If I had known earlier what I learned from this book, that fire elemental wouldn’t have destroyed my spell book, and I’d still know how to cast gelatinous cube to gello. A must-have for all wizards and magic-using elves,” said Alfric Tingard, editor-in-chief of Ierendi Adventures Quarterly): This 60-page volume presents a series of anecdotal mishaps with spell books, and Bargle’s research notes for a spell he’s named steel spells. The purpose of this spell is to allow even wizards of limited power to turn spell books into small (one-inch diameter) virtually indestructible steel medallions. By uttering a command word, the medallion turns into a spell book and visa versa. Whereas the earlier editions of this book only provided readers with Bargle’s research notes (thus requiring readers to come up with their versions of the spells,) the collector’s edition provides the finished spell! (“As always, Bargle the Infamous is working for the betterment of wizards everywhere!”)

Note: steel spells is a 2nd-level spell that will indeed transform any spell book into a steel medallion (engraved with the symbol or words of the cast-er’s choice.) A command word must be uttered to change the medallion to a book and back again. What isn’t mentioned in Adventurer’s Companion, however, is that any dispel magic attack, regardless of caster levels, will make the steel spells enchantment irreversible. This, of course, is exceptionally inconvenient if the mage upon whom dispel magic was cast happened to be wearing his transformed spell book around his neck. At DM’s option, this flaw in the spell may be recognized by PCs who carefully read Bargle’s research notes and make a successful Intelligence check.

Conclusion

Hopefully, DMs running magic-rich campaigns will find the BeB Magic Company a useful model for magic shops that carry anything but girdles of giant strength—there’s nothing like saddling the PC looking for a ring of invisibility with an invisible ring. At the very least, there are one or two rings in this article that can shake up jaded players—and bring happy smiles to everyone’s faces (or at least the DM’s face).
The morning silence was cut by the sound of horse hooves on the cobbled streets of Arabel. Tanis Half-Elven, one of the heroes from the War of the Lance, was the first to meet the enemy outside the city. He was shocked at the sight of the monster Lord Soth, but determined to help defend Cormyr. To do so, he would need the help of one of his new friends, and one of the Forgotten Realms' own famed heroes. Trystan of Moonshae to do it. Lord Soth predicted such a union and summoned the Realms' own Undead Bloodlords to help stop this minor resistance. "Now what?" thought the heroes. And as if in response, the cries from the Warriors of the Iron Legion and a quickly-assembled War Band erupted from the walls of the city. This battle would be a stalemate. Lord Soth would not get to defeat Cormyr this time. But this would not be the last time....

#7101 FUZZYHEROES® game
by Christopher Clark, 1992

It may not seem like it at first glance, but the FUZZY HEROES game is a set of miniatures war game rules, pretty much the same as any other. Instead of hordes of 15-mm Napoleonicic figures fighting across a felt-covered tabletop, it features plush animals (the Fuzzy Heroes) in a war against hard-plastic action figures (the Renegade Boy Toys), using the terrain of the bedroom, or the floor of the playroom.

The FUZZY HEROES game comes in a nicely-produced 80-page book, perfect-bound, with holes pre-drilled to fit a standard three-ring binder. The cover and interior feature cartoon-style artwork (by Jon Niccum), most of which are mere decoration, but a few of which do happen to illustrate rules points from the text. The layout is simple and quite readable (although the text does suffer from typo problems), and the table of contents is complete (making the lack of an index only a minor quibble). The materials needed for play are basically the same as for any other miniatures game: some 6-sided dice, rulers/tape measures, figures (plush and plastic toys), terrain (pillow mountains, sock rocks, etc.), paper & pencils, and a playing surface. Since all of these materials should be easy to find in any gamer’s home, at a total cost of $10.95, the FUZZY HEROES game is probably going to be the least expensive miniatures game you’ll ever come across.

Now the rules come in. Each stuffed animal or plastic toy is assigned ratings in six statistics: Energy Points (EP: the loss of which causes a character to fall asleep, making him a terrain obstacle), a Defensive Classification (DC: the number an attacker must beat on a roll of 3d6 to hit), a Movement Allowance (MA: a number of inches moveable each turn), Number of Attacks (#/Att.), Energy Dice (ED: damage rolled for successful attacks), and Terrain Effects (TE). Determining all these stats is a simple procedure related to the specifics of each stuffed animal in use, i.e., the “maximum linear measurement” of a toy determines its EP, MA (which can be modified by movement-related features, such as a toy having running shoes or no legs), and DC (which is then modified by its main color). Thus, the new stuffed tiger (“Tiggey”) my wife gave me for Christmas this past year would have 8 EP, a MA of 18”, and a DC of 9 (10 for length, -1 for being mostly orange), a #/Att. of 4/turn (for having four legs and a tail), an ED of 2 (he’d have had more if he’d been constructed with visible claws or teeth), and as for TE, Tiggey is affected normally by all except Mountains, because tigers are good at leaping and jumping.

In the combat section, the game’s miniatures-gaming roots become apparent: in order to attack another Hero “the attacking Fuzzy Hero must be in range, have the proper facing, have line-of-sight, and declare his attack”. All of these conditions can be determined pretty easily (“Are they within 6” of each other? Are they facing each other?”), and then the attacker rolls 3d6 for each of this...
Hero’s #/Attacks, and for each of these rolls that exceed the defender’s DC the attacker rolls damage die equal to the attacker’s ED; each odd number rolled subtracts one EP from the victim (that is a 1, 3, or 5 subtract only 1 EP each, not 1, 3, or 5 EP).

Of course, it couldn’t be as easy as that. There also are the game’s Advanced Rules, which add such options as Vehicles, Climbing, Retreating, Fatigue, Morale, Special Attacks (Tigger would be able to use a stunning Sonic Attack because he belches (it’s supposed to be a roar) when you squeeze him), Weapon-Use, Armor, and the dreaded Beguiling Breakaway Bonus Blanket Bounce. And then there’s rules for building, besieging, storming, and undermining fortifications. There also is a chart that can be used to balance the strength of opposing forces by calculating point values for various Attribute levels and special powers, and either adjusting powers to even things out, or modify the scenario played to give the underdog more lenient victory conditions. The game’s authors recommend that you use the Advanced Rules sparingly, as there are lots of them, and it would force the players to refer to the book much more frequently than usual during play. I also recommend that these rules be used only when all of the players are adults (or nearly so), or if any children playing are fully comfortable with the basic rules.

Although FUZZY HEROES game sessions would provide a hardcore miniatures player with a much-needed break, the primary purpose of this game is to introduce non-gamers to the miniatures hobby. While “non-gamers” usually refers to the friends, co-workers, and spouses of gamers in other reviews of “introductory” games, in this case, the definition must also be expanded to include children, nieces/nephews, etc. The subject matter, a war between heroic stuffed animals and villainous action figures, is something that youngsters have no trouble understanding, and the Basic Rules are simple and short enough that children down to the recommended age of six should have no trouble playing as long as their parental assistants are on hand. Not only does this help ensure that there’ll be a next generation of miniatures players, but it also gives the present generation an activity in common with their kids (or grandkids!), which can be a rare thing indeed. Still, a slightly more basic version of the rules that would have allowed these young kids to play on their own once the game was set up would have been nice.

Finally, there is a complete scenario (“They’ve Kidnapped Santa!”) that makes use of many of the Advanced Rules to serve as an introduction to them. The adventure comes complete with multiple factions within the two main forces (to allow for more than two players), varying victory conditions, and strategic notes. Unfortunately, it also comes with the assumption that the players will have the same mix of stuffed animals and plastic toys as the authors, and fully ten pages of the book are taken up by Character Forms for the Heroes and Renegades involved in this scenario.

But what’s the biggest problem with the FUZZY HEROES game? Well, just as most miniatures games recreate a specific event or era in history, and it behooves a Napoleonic player to know a bit about the Napoleonic Wars, the FUZZY HEROES game comes with its own “canned” history that you get to recreate (and expand upon) in play. Throughout the book there are narrative sections that describe battles between the Fuzzy Heroes of FrolicHaven (under good King Swineheart) and the Renegade Boy Toys (under the evil Eye King). Unfortunately, while reading some of these short bits can be fun, the more of them I came across, the more I skimmed over them; I just didn’t care all that much about the deliberations of King Swineheart’s Court before they went to the field to play-out a battle. If you aren’t interested in reading how some other group of players might have role-played events in the background of their own adventures, then this material becomes filler.

Still, ignoring a few pages of dubious value, and assuming that the players are going to be able to figure out just how many complications they can manageably add to their play sessions, the FUZZY HEROES game makes for a good, inexpensive, and fun game that “can be enjoyed by the whole family” (as the books back cover puts it).

#7102 FUZZY SUPER HEROES* game by Christopher Clark, 1993

What do you do when you’ve mastered all the Advanced Rules in the FUZZY HEROES game? You add a whole new set (with a somewhat different flavor) from the FUZZY SUPER HEROES rules. Like the first volume, this supplement is 80 perfect-bound pages long, drilled for a 3-ring binder, and again priced at $10.95.

The premise of this book is that some of the Fuzzy Heroes have come across some funny costumes that grant the wearers sooper powers when worn. These discoveries are described in some more lengthy narratives (in fact, there are more of them here than there were in FUZZY HEROES) and many of the Jon Niccum cartoons throughout illustrate scenes from the narratives.

In order to convert a normal Fuzzy Hero (or Renegade) into a Sooper Hero, he must possess (and wear) a mask, cape, and emblem of some sort, all of which can be as simple as a piece of masking tape stuck onto the appropriate part of the toy, or as complicated as a fully-fitted sewn costume. If a toy qualifies, it automatically gets a set of Sooper Attributes (which are identical for all Sooper Heroes, and higher than for normal toys), some common Sooper Powers (Flight, Sooper Strength, and the ability to directly attack buildings and vehicles), an individual Sooper Power based on the costume’s main color (so that Airbear, a superhero bear I sewed for myself as a kid, would have the “Ballistic Weapon Energy Absorption” power because of his mostly-red costume), and a special “trademark ability” chosen by the player (such as fire- or ice-breathing, or Size Control, which can only be taken if the player has several different-sized versions of the same toy to use to represent the Hero growing or shrinking). Some of the powers have silly components (to activate the Reflection power, the player must say “I’m rubber, you’re glue. Whatever you do bounces off me and sticks to you.”), but are generally simple enough that young players are going to understand them (although adults will still have to participate to keep track of the rules).

While the Sooper Powers themselves are just an extension of the Advanced Rules options in the FUZZY HEROES game, there is one major change to the rules. In addition to gaining special powers, Fuzzy Sooper Heroes adopt a chivalric code of conduct called the W.A.S.H. (“Words Attributable to Sooper Heroes”). As a result, Fuzzy Sooper Heroes find it difficult to retreat from combat, they must always attack their strongest enemies first, and they must always look for opportunities to use “Buddy Talk” to convert an opponent to their side in a conflict without need of combat. In addition, such activities as attacking a foe while he’s down and taunting defeated enemies are prohibited. To enforce these role-playing-like injunctions, a system of penalties and rewards is introduced: Heroes can be awarded Chivalry Points for “conspicuous chivalry” with the agreement of the other players, and they can be used to improve dice rolls and Attribute scores in play. The penalty for breaking the code of conduct is for the offending toy to be “outcast” from Fuzzy Hero society, being “placed back in the toy box until they regain their senses”.

In addition, there are rules given for running tournaments that include internal restrictions, such as the prohibition of “secret tournaments” (all tournaments must be publicly proclaimed and no prospective contestant can be turned down), the requirement that safe-conduct passes be issued to all participants, the necessity for tangible rewards (such as special weapons or deeds to land) to be issued, and the idea that tournament grounds are “neutral territory,” all of which come with penalties for infringements. As a subset of the new tournament rules, there are also rules for Jousting, Pugilism, and other contests of skill or power.

To finish up the book, another complete adventure (“The Assault on Castle Stuffmore”), and the Character Forms for the 36 Fuzzy Heroes and Renegades (taking up 12 pages) are included, as well as a two-page summary of charts from the original FUZZY HEROES book.

There are two main effects of the addition of this chivalric code and of Chivalry Points. The first is that the authors hope to install the rules of fair-play into young players. For the first time, there’s a set of game rules which specifically say that there is a penalty (having your toy taken out of play) for poor sportsmanship, and a reward (Chivalry Points) for playing within the spirit of the game. And the fact that Chivalry Points can be awarded only upon the unanimous agreement of all the players should quickly teach cooperation to players.

The second effect is that, by adding a method whereby players can permanently increase the Attributes of their “characters,” and by making rules about conduct within the game’s background (i.e., rules like the safe-conduct to tournaments, which govern events outside of the conflict that the war game portion of the rules governed), the FUZZY SOOPER HEROES rules has turned the FUZZY HEROES game into a role-playing game. Thus, all of the use that could have been made of the original game to introduce children to the minatures war gaming hobby, can now be turned towards introducing them to RPGs.

Although the percentage of “fluff” text in the FUZZY SOOPER HEROES book was even higher than that in the FUZZY HEROES game, the remaining text was useful, and it added an entirely new dimension to the game. While not perfect, this is definitely a book to buy if you liked the FUZZY HEROES game.

Note: Inner City Games also has FUZZY HEROES plush animals available for use in the game.
A mauve claw would look simply lovely over that archway!

Factol Dionystan of the Beautification League

Faction philosophy: This faction believes the multiverse is a place to be enjoyed, and they see it as their duty to help everybody to enjoy it by "beautifying" it. These berks will take any opportunity to paint a wall, hang a picture, rearrange furniture, plant a garden, or any of a dozen other things to increase the charm of a place. This includes them telling a cutter what they really think about a body's clothes, hairstyle, and home.

Here's the chant: by beautifying the multiverse, a body pleases the powers, or whatever stands behind the powers and pulls their strings. Even the most offensive individual can be brought around to happiness and goodness if only given a nice place to live and trendy clothes—and maybe a good bath and a thorough makeover. Well, these are the cutters who are going to bring the change around, whether anybody else likes it or not.

It's not that these berks are militant—but they are persistent. They figure they know the dark of how things should look, and everyone else had better listen. A body who doesn't listen to their advice ought to watch out. The Beautification League might sneak up one night and do some redecorating—or they might just decide a cutter "doesn't fit the color scheme" and eliminate him.

The Decorators seem to have a special grudge against the sods and bar-mies of Sigil, because they tend to clutter up the landscape, and they've got a general order to get rid of all they see. The nicer Decorators might bring the unfortunates to a place where they can be kept or even rehabilitated, but the nastier bashers of the Beautification League have been to remove such "eyesores" permanently.

The Beautification League has been working on Sigil for years, and while a few smart-mouth bashers might say that's why the city looks the way it does, the truth is that the Decorators haven't accomplished much. They have two big problems. First, the planes are just too big (try watching infinite color schemes!), and not enough people care to help the Decorators, especially in places like Baator.

Second, the Decorators don't always agree, and they often argue among themselves.

Primary plane of influence: The Decorators maintain a small, tastefully embellished abode in Arborea. They could have chosen any plane, but Mechanus was "too boring," the Abyss "simply disgusting," Pandemonium "far too windy," and so forth. In Sigil, the Beautification League makes its headquarters in the Grand Gardens.

Eligibility: Evil characters can't join this faction; as the Decorators put it, their taste is "tres gauche." Other than that, anybody can join the Beautification League.

Benefits: A Decorator can tell instantly when something is out of place. When a member of the faction enters a room, the DM should make a Wisdom check for the character; if the check succeeds, the character instantly notices any secret or concealed doors in the room.

Restrictions: A Decorator also notices when other things are out of place, or if they aren't aesthetically pleasing—and the Decorator can't help telling a body about it either. This makes them annoying, and a member of the Beautification League suffers a -3 penalty to Charisma.

The Free Flora Collective
(The Veggies, The Tree League)

Faction philosophy: The members of this faction are convinced that walking plants are destined to rule the multiverse. Of course, that's mainly because the high-up men of the Free Flora Collective are actually high-up plants. The chant goes like this: ani-
The Lady of Pun says,

"Strike a poseur."

Flora Collective nearby. See, since the Free Flora Collective believes in the superiority of plants, they try to stop anyone and everyone from harming plants. While they're mostly concerned with intelligent plants, they also try to protect their "unenlightened and soil-bound cousins."

One of the Veggies' ongoing projects is to kill all the herbivores they can find. This not only protects plants, but once it begins to work—they say—the carnivores live by killing, while plants live by digesting the rotting remains of once-living beings. These berks (barks?) say this makes plants a superior form of life.

The Free Flora Collective, though, has decided to take the battle to the animals, and are an armed and radical bunch. A berk who goes around cutting down trees, or trampling on the grass, or eating salads, had better hope there's not a member of the Free Flora Collective nearby.
vores and omnivores will be forced to feed on each other, until the animals wipe themselves out.

Primary plane of influence: The Veggies are said to have headquarters in the Beastlands, where they hunt herbivores, and in Bytopia, where their freedom fighters work to stop the depredations of the woodcutters of Dothion. They don’t have a headquarters in Sigil, though they are said to have “branches” in various gardens scattered around the city.

Allies and enemies: The Free Flora Collective considers all other factions to be their enemies, mainly because the other factions don’t allow sentient plants, but they do allow bashers that eat plants, or cut them down for firewood. The Veggies have a special hatred for the Beautification League, who regard their kind as mere decoration, and often confine them to pots or fenced plots of land with poor soil and lighting.

Most other factions are unaware of the existence of the Veggies. Those that are aware regard them as pretty ludicrous. The Veggies just don’t fit into the philosophies of most other factions. There are some Sensates who like talking to the Veggies, so they can come to understand “the plight of the plant,” and the Xaositects like pulling the leaves off Veggies. The biggest enemy of the Free Flora Collective, though, is the Herbivorous Assembly (see below).

Eligibility: Only an intelligent, mobile plant can become a member of the Free Flora Collective. The faction also allows a few associate members: cutters (not leaf cutters) who are purely carnivorous, and who sympathize with the Veggies’ quest for freedom from oppression. As a body might suspect, there aren’t a lot of associate members.

Benefits: The Veggies gain benefits according to their species: they can usually hide among humanoids, since few humanoids recognize them as intelligent beings. Thus, a member of the Free Flora Collective can hide in the corner, looking like a potted plant, and eavesdrop on a conversation. Though Veggies usually consider such duty degrading, they understand its value in building a vast log of information, and they have established a spy network known as “the Grapevine.”

They are said to have plants in every other faction headquarters, where they can sow the seeds of revolt.

Restrictions: Like the faction’s benefits, its restrictions are based on the species of the members. There are some places a plant can’t go, and there are some things a plant can’t do. For example, it’s nearly impossible for a treant to impersonate a dwarven ambassador and crash a swanky party. In addition, most humanoids have little respect for walking plants, and they tend to regard them as ambulatory kindling.

The Herbivorous Assembly (The Vegetarians)

Factol Du’liddel of the Herbivorous Assembly

Faction philosophy: The Herbivorous Assembly consists of berks who have decided to never eat meat. And they think nobody else should be eating meat, either. They think the dark of the multiverse is that the so-called dumb animals are the repositories of great wisdom. Oh, maybe not all animals are fonts of knowledge, but some are, and it’s better to not eat any of them. If a cutter (a leaf cutter, in this case) can live in harmony with the animals, talk to the animals, then she’ll learn the dark of things.

So, the Vegetarians don’t eat animals, though a few namers in the faction might eat some animal products, like milk, cheese, or eggs. And to make sure they can get along with the animals some day, they have to keep others from eating them or bothering them as well. This means animals can’t be hunted for any reason, for food, or to provide raw materials for clothing, or for any other reason. Rabid Vegetarians have been known to attack unlucky sods just for wearing leather. A cutter can’t expect to advance very far in the ranks of the Herbivorous Assembly if he wears leather or any other product taken from an animal.

One day, says the Herbivorous Assembly, when every living being in the multiverse has given up eating meat, everyone will live in peace and harmony, and the dark of everything will be revealed.

Of course, this means the Herbivorous Assembly also is devoted to wiping out all carnivores. However, they can fight predators only when those predators attack innocent herbivores. Thus, a lot of Vegetarians hang around in the forests of the various planes, watching herds of plant-eaters, waiting for a predator to attack.

Primary plane of influence: The Vegetarians have a headquarters in the Beastlands. In Sigil, they run a chain of “health food” inns, where “gourmet vegetarian dishes” are prepared.

Allies and enemies: The Vegetarians try to get along with most of the other factions, though they have a strong distaste for the Wizards of the Black Teddy, because of the excessive amounts of leather they wear. (It’s not that the Black Teddy wizards wear large amounts—pieces—of leather; they don’t. It’s just that leather is all they wear.) The Vegetarians also go around rattling their bone-boxes about the evils of eating meat, and annoying almost everybody.

Most factions consider the Vegetarians to be pretty harmless, if a little barmy. The Sensates think their views are too restrictive: to really experience life, one should eat a few animals, say the Sensates; this makes the Vegetarians think ill of them. The Dustmen think the Vegetarians are all barmy; death is a part of life, and hunting and killing a part of the grand scheme. Finally, the Veggies have a very strong dislike of the Vegetarians, and the two factions have constant skirmishes in Sigil and elsewhere. Lately, the Veggies have begun attacking inns run by the Vegetarians, to “free political prisoners.” [Editor’s note: Eventually, the Herbivorous Assembly and the Free Flora Collective declared war on one...

PARANOIA

The Fifth Edition

WEST END GAMES

So exciting and new we had to skip 2 editions.

another and wiped each other out.

Eligibility: Anybody can join the Herbivorous Assembly, as long as they never eat meat again. The faction is open to all races and alignments, but humans and elves fill most of their ranks.

Benefits: A Vegetarian gains the ranger’s ability to befriend and calm animals. A Vegetarian ranger gets a free nonweapon proficiency in Animal Training.

Restrictions: A Vegetarian can never attack an animal, but can defend himself or another animal. This has been the cause of much consternation to adventuring members (and their companions), because the Vegetarian is restricted from helping in many combat encounters. They can defend companions from predators, but won’t help anyone who eats meat, because it’s a fight between predators.

The Wizards of the Black Teddy (The Babes)

Factol Elle McFearsome of the Wizards of the Black Teddy

Innumerable male cutters and bashers

Faction philosophy: Basically, the Wizards of the Black Teddy are bent on domination—of the planes, and of anyone who gets in their way. As far as these cutters are concerned, the multiverse is messed up because it is mostly controlled by addle-coved males. To solve all the problems, the multiverse must be ruled by females. As their name implies, the Wizards of the Black Teddy have two primary methods for accomplishing their goal: magic and, well, their rather obvious charms, made more obvious by alluring attire—mostly leather. The Babes aren’t murderous, like the Mercykillers. They’d prefer a lot of submissive servants to a handful of corpses.

The chant says this faction sprang from a group called the Wizards of the Black Robes, on some backwater prime named Krynn. Tired of being ignored by men who felt superior by virtue of their gender, a group of women broke off from these robed wizards and formed their own group. They found that with a judicious change of attire, they were no longer ignored, and they could befuddle the simple-minded males they dealt with.

Later, a powerful female entity visited Krynn, and a lot of these female wizards decided to join her cause, and then went to live on the planes. There, with their goal of gaining power, especially for women, they found many willing recruits. More than a few female wizards joined their number, and quickly ascended to the rank of Mistress (the equivalent of the factors of other factions). These Mistresses are totally devoted to the Lady of Pain and have led the faction to a strong position in Sigil.

Primary plane of influence: The Wizards of the Black Teddy have a headquarters in Baator, specifically in the dungeons of Maladomini, where they give lesser fiends something to fear. The chant says there are hundreds of males chained to walls beneath Maladomini, where the Wizards of the Black Teddy can whip them into shape.

Allies and enemies: This faction’s allies and enemies can’t always be categorized; that is, part of a faction might hate them, while other members like them. For the most part, males of most species don’t have too much of a problem with the Babes—for blatantly obvious reasons—but some females do. However, the Sensates like the sensual nature of the Wizards of the Black Teddy, and the Ciphers admire their individuality. The Dustmen ignore them. The Anarchists are fond of the Babes because they are disruptive to other factions, and the Guvners see the Wizards of the Black Teddy as a potential threat to their power structure.

Eligibility: The Wizards of the Black Teddy have four somewhat unusual membership requirements. First, all are wizards of one kind or another; generalist, dual-classed, multi-classed, and specialist wizards are allowed. Second, only females of any species can join. Third, they can’t be good in alignment. And finally, to be a Wizard of the Black Teddy, a sorceress must have a Charisma score of at least 13. This is one of the few factions that accepts fiends as members; there are more than a few erinyes and succubi in their ranks, not to mention a lot of tieflings.

Benefits: The Babes are very distracting; males who see them tend to forget what they’re doing, what they’re saying, where they’re going, who they are, and so forth. When fighting one of the Wizards of the Black Teddy, a male of any species, intelligent or unintelligent (most of the Babes would argue that there’s no such thing as an intelligent male), has to make a successful Wisdom check, or he can’t bring himself to strike her. For monsters without a Wisdom score, roll 3d6 to determine a score for any creature with Intelligence of 5 or more; for others, use the creature’s Intelligence score.

Restrictions: One detriment to belonging to this faction is that other females usually don’t like the Babes, and they go around calling them "trolls" or worse. The real disadvantage, though, is the, well, uniform (such as it is) of the Babes. To say the least, it’s a bit drafty. A Wizard of the Black Teddy suffers a permanent -1 penalty to her Constitution score due to getting chilled easily.

Faction philosophy: This faction doesn’t so much have a philosophy as it has a way of life: they don’t care about anything. They don’t go around telling other people not to care, and they don’t try to explain why nobody should care—they just don’t care themselves. And most Apathetics don’t go around doing much, or even go around at all.

There are a few namers in the Apathetic Alliance who use that as an excuse to do whatever they want. These bashers are a danger to themselves and others, but usually don’t last for very long; either someone puts them in the deadbook, or they stop caring enough to keep moving.

The Apathetic Alliance started one day when a Bleaker and a Dustman were talking philosophy. Both fell into a deep depression, and both stopped caring about most everything. They stopped going to their faction meetings and stopped wearing faction colors. After a while, their "new" philosophy spread, and other apathetic types started hanging around with them.

While Apathetics occasionally discuss philosophy with other faction members, the conversation usually ends with "Who cares?" The rest of the time, most Apathetics just sit around, in an almost catatonic silence. If their faction were to go away, few would notice and fewer would care.

Primary plane of influence: No Apathetic has ever bothered to build a headquarters, so they don’t have one. They also don’t have a factol, because nobody cares enough to lead the rest of them in just not caring about anything. To join the Apathetic Alliance, a body just needs to stop expressing an interest in anything, dress in black, and to start hanging around in dark coffee-houses with other Apathetics.

Allies and enemies: The Apathetic Alliance doesn’t see much point to having allies, but they don’t see much of a point to anything, really. They also can’t raise enough feeling about any of the other factions to consider any of them enemies either. Oh, some grumble a little about the Guvners, who see a point to everything, and a few can muster a little admiration for the carefree Xaositects, but most Apathetics just keep to themselves.

Most of the other factions ignore the Apathetics—as the factol of the Athar once said, "Who cares about the Apathetics?" Still, the Bleakers and the Doomguard have some admiration for their philosophy. The Dustmen also share some common ground, since they believe there is nothing in life to care about (except death, of course). The Sensates find the attitude of the Apathetics incomprehensible, and the Guvners deplore the Apathetic Alliance’s disregard for laws (and for everything else). The Signers have a little admiration for the Apathetics, because of their rarely exhibited power of mind over matter (see Benefits below), but don’t appreciate the Apathetic philosophy.

Eligibility: Anybody can join the Apathetic Alliance, though most are better suited to the Bleakers, Doomguard, Dustmen, or Xaositects.

Benefits: The Apathetics, since they don’t care about anything, tend not to notice most things. Therefore, they are completely immune to attacks from normal weapons. Only a spell or a magical weapon can attract enough of their attention to actually cause them damage.

Restrictions: An Apathetic doesn’t care enough to adventure, or to take part in any kind of communication or combat. To actually participate in an encounter, an Apathetic must exert his willpower, represented by making a Wisdom check; only if the check succeeds can the Apathetic draw a weapon or otherwise act.

If I Only Had a Brain
For the AD&D® game
(with apologies to the Scarecrow from the Wizard of Oz)

I could while away the hours
Polishing my powers Inflicting lots of pain.

But I’ve nothing in my tummy,
Some gray matter would be yummy
If I only had a brain.

I would start out with a mindblast
(That always takes ‘em out fast),
Their intellects I’d drain.

My chops I’d be lickin’—
Some may say it tastes like chicken—
If I only had a brain.

Oh, I
Can tell you why
Although it hurts me to the very core.
In the past I’d eat those tasty brains galore.
Now I’m too fat
To use the door.

Now in order to get thinner,
Just a lobe or two for dinner.
This diet is insane.

But the day I am slimmer,
I’ll set my biggest pot to simmer
And I’ll have myself a brain!
You can play MAGIC
For collectable card games
(with apologies to America)

I never believed in games
Where cards were the key
I said if I can’t roll dice
Then how can it be? No, no MAGIC
No MAGIC for me.
Then I played it.
I really adored it.
It took my cash.
I couldn’t afford it.
I’ll tell you now what it’s all about:
This game I Couldn’t live without.

You can play MAGIC.
You can buy any card that you desire. MAGIC.
And you can trade for those you cannot just acquire.

You know I’m right
You can play all night.
On the weekends, too.

Though you’ve got your deck,
Your life’s a wreck.
Your other friends forget ‘bout you.

Doo doo doo doo doo di
Doo doo doo doo doo di
Doo doo doo doo doo di
Doo doo doo doo doo.

And though you don’t want to,
You should try to break free.
I know that it’s hard to do,
But I made it happen for me.

You can play MAGIC.
Or you can have yourself a date or two.
Without MAGIC.
Now you have cash again, and time to spend it, too.

You know darn well
Addictions can be hell.
Take a tip from me:
Set your cards on fire
And retire.
Where did you put that RPG?

I am a Vrock
For the PLANESCAPE™ campaign setting
(with apologies to Simon and Garfunkel)

Abyssal day
For a vulturous tanar’ri
I fight the Blood War,
Circling my victims
Cringing far below.
The look upon their faces shows they know
I am a vrock.
I’m a tanar’ri.

I kill baatezu
With my talons cruel and mighty.
Your armor they will penetrate.
I have no fear of weapons,
Magic is my bane.
It’s order and it’s goodness I disdain.

I am a vrock.
I’m a tanar’ri.
Don’t talk of mercy.
Well, I’ve heard those pleas before,
The weeping of my enemies.
I won’t forget my orders
Or what I want to do—
Just sink my beak and claws right into you.
You Orc, You Orc
For the AD&D game
(with apologies to Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra, et al)

Start spreading the word,
I'm hunter, you're prey.
I'm gonna be the death of you,
You orc, you orc.

My village has heard
I'm longing to slay.
I'll stab the very heart of you,
You orc, you orc.

I wanna prove that, as you sow so shall you reap,
Because you burned up my farm,
Ate all my sheep.

Your death is assured.
I'll find you today.
I'm just too wicked smart for you,
You stupid orc!

I am a vrock.
I'm a tanar'ri.
I have a screech
That can stun my foes for miles.
I've a negative five Armor Class.
Hiding from your doom? I'll put you in your tomb
I'll cut you down before you strike at me.

I am a vrock.
I'm a tanar'ri.
And a vrock feels no pain.
And my victim always dies.
(with apologies to Elton John)

I was mummified while still alive.
To become undead is what I contrived.
Now I have changed, quite a punch I pack
And you’re really gonna get it now—
The lich is back
Ohhhh!

If you want a fight, well stop on by.
I’m skin and bones, but I cannot die.
A lich don’t have no mortal coil.
I hang out in the evening under feet of soil.
Ohhhh!

I’m a lich, I’m a lich
Oh the lich is back.
An icy touch is my fav’rite knack.
Yes a lich, yes a lich
And I’m stronger than you.
I’ll scare you outta your shoes.
You know you will lose,
Ohhhh.

My chief domain is the subterrain.
My crypt’s decor is classic profane.
So come, approach—go ‘head, attack!
Oh, you’ll see your days are numbered now,
The lich is back!

I’m a lich, I’m a lich
Oh, the lich is back.
Rot and glory (I’m no natural cat).
Yes a lich, yes a lich
And I’m stronger than you.
I’ll scare outta your shoes.
You know you will lose,
Ohhhh.
THE DESIGN REVOLUTION CONTINUES

These maps were all printed directly from Campaign Cartographer

Campaign Cartographer™, launched in October 1993, was the first PC compatible Computer Aided Design (CAD) software specially for RPG’s. Now that revolutionary game aid is complemented by Dungeon Designer™, another first from ProFantasy.

CAMPAIGN CARTOGRAPHER™

Derived from award winning professional CAD software and distinguished by a host of specialist tools, Campaign Cartographer™ is the smart, revolutionary way to create detailed and attractive maps and designs for RPG’s. Add any amount of detail, zooming from world view to an insect on a street in an instant. Hide or show features, secrets and text depending on who the map is for and then print at any scale.

- 100+ pre-defined terrain, flora and landmark symbols.
- Build your own symbol library.
- Straight-forward drawing and editing commands.
- Text linking for descriptions.
- Rapid placement for all terrain, structure and vegetation types.
- Show and hide related features to produce custom maps.
- Re-use sections of completed maps as the basis for new designs.
- Optional box and square overlays.
- Create battle arenas, character records, etc in the separate General menu.
- Free Newsdesk for registered users.
- Numerous example maps including the Jaw Peninsula.
- Written in assembly language, making it the fastest PC CAD package in the world.

System requirements: PC, AT, PS/2 or compatible, MS-DOS 4.0 or higher, 1.4 MB floppy drive, pointing device (eg. Microsoft mouse) recommended: a hard disk drive and printer. CC drives 99% of all printers and graphics cards to their full potential.

Campaign Cartographer is $69.95 in the US, £49.95 in the UK and rest of the world

DUNGEON DESIGNER™

In giving role players the power to create any map on their PC ProFantasy started a revolution. Now advance even further with Dungeon Designer, the brand new addition to Campaign Cartographer.

An extra menu, full of time-saving features, gives you all the facilities to easily design the dungeons of your imagination. There are no limitations. Simply sketch the outline you want then let Dungeon Designer add the detail. Walls with any thickness, rooms with any shape, corridors at any angle and more than a hundred dungeon symbols. All with the authenticity that you have come to expect from Campaign Cartographer.

- 100+ pre-defined dungeon mapping symbols.
- Powerful new wall and door commands.
- Walls with true thickness.
- Text linking to show descriptions when room number is clicked on.
- Drawing linking to quickly load parent maps.
- Detailed building floor plans easily produced.
- Optionally lock features to adjustable grid 1000 room example Hommunkaz Dungeon.
- Concealed drawing layers for hidden features.
- More symbols, menus and fonts for Campaign Cartographer.

Add on modules including new symbols, castles and towns coming soon

Convention Calendar Policies

This column is a service to our readers worldwide. Anyone may place a free listing for a game convention here, but the following guidelines must be observed.

In order to ensure that all convention listings contain accurate and timely information, all material should be either typed double-spaced or printed legibly on standard manuscript paper. The contents of each listing must be short and succinct.

The information given in the listing must include the following, in this order:
1. Convention title and dates held;
2. Site and location;
3. Guests of honor (if applicable);
4. Special events offered;
5. Registration fees or attendance requirements; and,
6. Address where additional information and confirmation can be obtained.

Convention flyers, newsletters, and other mass-mailed announcements will not be considered for use in this column; we prefer to see a cover letter with the announcement as well. No call-in listings are accepted. Unless stated otherwise, all dollar values given for U.S. and Canadian conventions are in U.S. currency.

WARNING: We are not responsible for incorrect information sent to us by convention staff members. Please check your convention listing carefully! Our wide circulation ensures that over a quarter of a million readers worldwide see each issue. Accurate information is your responsibility.

Copy deadlines are the last Monday of each month, three months prior to the on-sale date of an issue. Thus, the copy deadline for the December issue is the last Monday of October. Announcements for North American and Pacific conventions must be mailed to: Convention Calendar, DRAGON® Magazine, TSR Limited, 120 Church End, Cherry Hinton, Cambridge CB1 3LB, United Kingdom.

Important: DRAGON® Magazine no longer publishes phone numbers for conventions. Publishing incorrect numbers is always possible and is a nuisance to both the caller and those receiving the misdirected call. Be certain that any address given is complete and correct.

To ensure that your convention listing makes it into our files, enclose a self-addressed stamped postcard with your first convention notice; we will return the card to show that your notice was received. You also might send a second notice one week after mailing the first. Mail your listing as early as possible, and always keep us informed of any changes. Please avoid sending convention notices by fax, as this method has not proved to be reliable.

Khenvorm Rallister, called the Gaunt, had worked long hours on the paths of magic, and the road was growing easier the further he travelled it. Today had given him a chance to prove his skills with a petrification spell of his own invention. He looked out of his tower at the results; twelve goblins serving as lawn ornaments, faces frozen in expressions of stony horror. His colleagues at the Guild of Seven Stars had helped him walk the Path of Stone, just as they had helped his first steps on the Path of Lesser Fire Magics. With luck and hard work, soon he would be a master of all the elements, and ready to challenge that old fool Anselm the Bald for the Guildmaster's chair. He smiled quietly to himself; no one at the Guild knew that the secret ways of necromancy had fallen to his superior intellect. They thought they had taught him all his tricks at the Seven Stars, but his mastery of the Reapers Road would be an unpleasant surprise for anyone foolish enough to oppose him...
A variant magic system for the AD&D® game

In most AD&D game campaigns, magic is organized into schools, colleges of magic that feature related spells such as charms, alterations, or illusions. Each mage can choose to learn any spell he finds, of any school. Specialist wizards can memorize more spells each day, at the price of being forever barred from all spells of certain schools. The current rules don’t allow for any variation from these two patterns—but there is another path that a wizard character can follow.

This article describes a new set of rules to govern magic in AD&D game campaigns. It allows a mage the best of both worlds; depending on the choices he makes when he begins studying magic, an archmage may be a specialist, a generalist, or may end up somewhere in between.

The spells he chooses early on determine what spells he gains in the future. Path magic—a blend of magic, step magic, or web magic—operates by mimicking the learning process. Mages don’t just jump randomly from spell to spell; they choose and then pursue paths of power that channel their options.

In the current rules, each spell is learned in isolation, with no connection to a larger picture. Magic loses some of its wonder because it operates just as reliably and simply as a hammer or any other tool. Variant rules based on spell points (sometimes called mana) fail for the same reason; they draw no connections between spells. But magic isn’t a tool; it’s an art, a system of interwoven knowledge and skills. This article reinforces that fact and restores a sense of progression to your fantasy role-playing setting.

In addition to improving the logic of the rules, grouping similar spells in sequence gives players a way to discuss spells in character: “Well, once we saw that Marzak of the Azure Lightning had mastered the seventh step of the Storm Path, we knew his magic could be the death of us all, so we pretended to surrender, and then...” Paths are bodies of knowledge that are kept in colleges, where the initial stepping stones are passed down from masters to students. Colleges are founded to pursue certain forms of magic; to follow a path, a mage either must research each step on his own or join a guild or college. Because each mage’s guild is devoted to certain paths, the DM can limit player choices in a logical way (“They don’t teach the Path of the Mind at the Guild of Seven Stars”), but this also gives the player a choice to either accept the DM’s ruling (“I guess I’ll keep going to the guild anyway”) or take on new goals for more quests and adventures. (“We need to find another guild.”)

Learning magic step by step
What are the paths of power? In the game, they are sequences of related spells that must be learned in a particular order, from lowest to highest level. If a path contains more than one spell of a certain level, the mage only needs to learn one of those spells in order to progress along the path (but she may learn more than one spell of a certain level on a given path if she so desires).

In this system of magic, each step on the path of power depends on understanding the principles behind previous steps; that is, a mage never can learn a spell if he does not understand the previous spells on the same path. For this reason, spells are arranged in sequences of required learning, like the rungs of a ladder or the steps on a staircase. For instance, before a mage on the path of Greater Fire Magic can cast a fireball spell (third level), he must be able to cast at least one of the three second-level spells preceding fireball on this path: Agannazar’s scorch, burning hands, or pyrotechnics.

This system might seem too constraining, forcing choices, a straitjacket for mages. However, there are advantages to pursuing magic along paths. In fact, it opens many choices as well, for a mage on a path may always automatically find information about the next spell on a path when he reaches the experience level that allows him to cast it. No more need to rummage through dusty tomes with all the dignity of a looter on a battlefield; no need for a player to depend on a DM’s whim for the spells he wants; no need for the DM to drop scrolls and spell books “conveniently” into every adventure.

Simply put, the mage rolls the percentage chance to learn a spell whenever he wishes (assuming he has access to that level of spell). If a path is frustrated in one direction (he fails the roll for a prerequisite spell), he may be able to approach it from another direction (if the path contains more than one spell of the same level), or he may try again to learn the next spell when he gains another level.

Paths of power that contain four or more spells are commonly called “roads,” but in general there is no system for naming paths. Many of the paths of power described below are given different names in different lands: the Trickster’s Road is known as Loki’s Path among the Norse, and Hermes’ Path near Mount Olympus. Be creative in choosing your own names and your own forks in the roads.

Greater and lesser paths
All paths belong to one of two categories, greater or lesser. The distinction between the two is simply a matter of whether a path includes one or more first-level spells. Greater paths, the ones that contain first-level spells, are the paths that all mages must start on. Their names are printed in bold type in the lists of paths given later in this article.

The shorter paths that begin with higher-level spells are referred to as lesser paths, for their forms of magic are not as simple or as extensive as the greater paths. Only more powerful mages travel these paths, since they include no first-level spells. Lesser paths are printed in bold italic type in the lists below.

Skipping steps
As a wizard progresses along a path, he builds a base of knowledge, formulas, and techniques for the magic of the path. Once he knows spells from two or more consecutive spell levels on a path, he may skip one step farther along on the path. For example, a wizard on the Eagle’s Road already knows feather fall (first level) and ride the wind (second level). He may then skip one step (the third-level fly spell) and learn spectral wings (fourth level).

Only one spell level can be skipped on any path. However, it is possible to go back and fill in a step that had been skipped earlier. In the example, the wizard could learn fly after originally skipping it in favor of spectral wings, and then, if he so chose, he could skip another step farther along the path—passing over vortex, for instance, and learning Bloodstone’s spectral steed as his next spell on this path.

Interesting connections
In one sense, path magic is simply an extension and refinement of the schools of magic. However, this interpretation oversimplifies and misses the system’s broader usefulness for DMs and players. Sure, some paths represent the core spells of the various schools; it’s only logical, since the spells of each school are derived from the same arcane tradition. But paths link the spells of a school together (for instance, the Path of Deception described below covers much of the heart of the school of illusion), and also link together spells from completely unrelated schools (as in the Path of Shadows or the Path of the Drow).

Paths can make more interesting connections than schools can: for instance, the Dragon’s Road mimics the powers of many dragons, and the Path of the Drow includes many of the powers of the dark elves, as well as their spider magics.

How many paths can a mage follow?
The number of paths a mage can travel on depends on both his experience level and his Intelligence. Path magic requires a new set of assumptions about how many spells a mage can learn. The Intelligence Table in the Player’s Handbook defines the maximum number of spells of a certain level that a wizard character can know.
But spells in paths are not neatly arranged by level; they cross and intersect and clog that system.

The number of paths a specialist wizard can follow is a more complex issue. Generally, there aren’t any specialists of path magic, since the paths themselves set limits and force a mage to specialize by limiting what types of spells he can learn and cast. The bonuses for mastering a path provide an additional incentive to master just specialized paths of magic. However, if the DM and players prefer to keep specialists in the campaign, a specialist retains his normal bonuses (he may memorize one additional spell of each level he is capable of learning about) but he can learn fewer paths at any given level than a generalist (a mage) can. Spells from opposition schools are still off limits; this may prevent the specialist from gaining mastery of some paths. Opposition paths are beyond the scope of this article.

Table A below lists the number of paths that a mage or a specialist of a certain experience level can follow (i.e., learn spells from). Table B gives bonuses to this number according to the wizard’s Intelligence score (and it also includes the “Max. # of Spells/Lvl” and “Chance to Learn Spell” columns from the Intelligence Table in the Player’s Handbook, for convenience). For example, a mage (not a specialist) of 10th level with a 16 Intelligence can learn spells from up to 12 different paths (9 for being 10th level, +3 for his Int score).

Completing a path

If a wizard learns every spell in a path, the path is said to be completed, and it no longer counts against his maximum allowable number of paths. This rule makes archmages very powerful indeed, because they can learn more spell paths by completing prior ones, thus dodging the “Max. # Paths” limits of Table A. In addition, they can learn new paths very quickly (just by making an unbroken series of successful “% to learn” rolls), much more quickly than a traditional mage could gather all the formulae from spell books and grimoires hidden in obscure corners of the campaign. In general, though, paths become less and less limiting at higher levels, since the archmage knows almost everything is there to know about the arcane arts anyway; new paths are less challenging because of their similarities to spells he has already studied and mastered.

Forgetting steps

Powerful mages on a path may know so much about a certain set of spells that they have nothing more to learn on that road. They also may know so many basic spells that they cannot begin any new paths because of Intelligence or level limits on the number of spells they can learn. One way around the problem is to simply forget the first steps on other paths; once a mage has mastered the simplest forms of magic, he may not need access to those spells any longer. Unlike in the standard AD&D system, this means that spells can be removed from a mage’s repertoire.

Forgetting part of a spell path requires spells on that path; only one spell can be forgotten, and it must be the lowest-level spell on the path. Forgetting a spell eliminates all knowledge of the spell from the mage’s grimoires (or memory, see “New system” below) and opens a spell slot. Forgotten spells do not count against a mage when he attempts to skip steps at the high-level end of the path.

Forking paths

When paths of power intersect, the wizard learning the paths has three choices: he may continue to follow only the path he began with, ignoring the intersection; he can switch from one path to the other, abandoning the chance of any further progress on the first path; or he can pursue both paths by declaring that he will follow a forking path. These forking paths offer a wizard more options than just a straight line because he can learn spells from either path as he gains more levels, but each “branch” of the fork still counts as a separate path for purposes of determining how many paths a wizard can follow.

Some spells are listed on more than one path; there’s more than one way to learn many of the arts of magic, after all. Spells that intersect at the crossroads of two or more paths are called nexus spells. First-level spells are never nexus spells. To jump the track and switch from one path to another at a nexus point, the mage must know about the existence of both paths. Once he switches tracks on a forked path, he can no longer skip any spells beyond the nexus spell; this is only part of the price he pays for forking his path. If he abandons one path entirely (either by forgetting or completing it), he may skip spells on the second forking path normally.

Two-way travel

Although paths are generally meant to be followed from beginning to end (from lowest-level spell to highest-level spell), there is nothing to prevent a wizard from “back-tracking” to learn a lower-level spell he did not already know. In fact, this is what happens when a wizard fills in a step along a path that he had earlier skipped (see “Skipping steps” above). The same sort of “filling in” can be done for the sake of picking up a spell that didn’t have to be learned earlier (in the case of a path containing more than one spell of a certain level), and for the sake of acquiring lower-level spells along a path that the wizard began to follow at a nexus point (see Forking paths above). A wizard may not often find it useful to engage in this back-tracking, but it can be done if she so desires.

Paths of power

In the following lists, the spells in each path are given in the order they must be learned. Greater paths are indicated in bold type; lesser paths are in bold italic type. The level of a spell is indicated by the number in parentheses following it.

Unless otherwise indicated, a spell is from the Player’s Handbook. Spells identified as “new” are described later in this article. Spells from the Tome of Magic are indicated with an asterisk (*). Other sources are abbreviated as follows:

Path magic in the campaign

In campaign terms, path magic promotes magic as a discipline, an art learned stage by stage. DMs can tailor paths to suit their own tastes and the needs of the campaign, and powerful spells are the direct result of earlier studies. No mage can simply learn disintegrate without learning (for instance) ESP iron mind, and telekinesis first, since those spells precede disintegrate on the Path of the Mind.

Because the initial selection of paths will determine many of the mage’s future spell choices, the player and DM should consider the character’s first-level spells very carefully.

New system

In addition to the sequenced learning requirements of path magic, you may choose to offer mages a new system of casting spells as well. Normally, mages simply master the spells in their grimoires, memorize them, and cast them based on their level. Path magic allows for some interesting variations, if both the players and the DM agree.

The new system of spell-casting does not call on a complicated mana system; a wizard may still cast the same number of spells as given in the basic rules, but he does not memorize them ahead of time. Instead, each day the wizard declares which of the paths he will use. For that day, the mage must cast spells from those paths only. The number of daily paths is given on Table 4. This system gives a mage flexibility within constraints.

New spells

The following spells affect paths directly, forming by themselves a sort of “Path of Paths.” Because they strike at the root of a path wizard’s power, they should be extremely rare—and extremely feared. Any mage using them indiscriminately will soon find himself hunted by other wizards who want to see him stopped.

Close path (Abjuration)

Level: 3
Range: 10’/level
Components: V, S, M
Duration: 1 day
Casting Time: 3
Area of Effect: 1 wizard
Saving Throw: Neg.

This lesser magic closes a mage’s access to a path he normally can follow. This bars his access to one path (chosen randomly), for the remainder of the day. Spells already memorized are not forgotten; the wizard simply can’t access them. The caster does not know which spell or spells are barred from the target (if any). After 24 hours pass, the target may memorize and cast spells of the closed path again normally.

The material component of the close path spell is a small silver key worth at least 50 gp, which must be broken during the casting.

Seal path (Abjuration) Reversible

Level: 5
Range: 10’/level
Components: V, S, M
Duration: Permanent until dispelled
Casting Time: 5
Area of Effect: 1 wizard
Saving Throw: Neg.

The wizard affected by this spell can learn no more spells in a path (chosen by the caster from among those the caster knows the target follows) until the magical roadblock of this spell is removed. If the target wizard fails his saving throw by 4 or more, he also suffers the effects of a close path spell affecting the same path for the remainder of the day. If the target makes the saving throw by more than 4, he may reflect the spell back at the caster. The caster is entitled to a saving throw against the weakened, reflected spell with a +4 bonus; if he succeeds there is no effect, but if he fails the spell affects him normally. The spell cannot be reflected more than once.

The seal on the chosen path can only be removed by an open path spell (the reversed form of seal path), a limited wish, or a wish spell. The material component is a shining seal made of a special alloy of lead and mithril. The seal is inscribed with the victim’s name or sigil, and its cost is never less than 1,000 gp.

Burn path (Necromancy/Abjuration)

Range: Touch
Components: V, S, M
Duration: Permanent
Casting Time: 8
Area of Effect: 1 wizard
Saving Throw: See below

This powerful destructive magic destroys all knowledge a mage has of one path chosen by the caster. The spells and formulas are all instantly forgotten, memorized spells vanish from the victim’s mind, and all spells on that path must be relearned as if the victim never knew them.

The spell’s effect cannot be reversed, but if the target’s saving throw succeeds, the path is merely sealed as per a seal path spell. The spell cannot be reflected.

The material component is a thin sheet of beaten gold inscribed with the formula for the spell that serves as the path’s starting point; this special scroll costs no less than 3,000 gp. The scroll is magically consumed in the casting.

Path masters

A wizard’s expertise with any given path improves if he has mastered the path. To become a master of a path, a wizard must know every single spell available to him in that given path—that is, every spell of a level he can cast. So long as he retains mastery, the master casts all of those spells more effectively. The benefits of mastery are simple: his spells gain a -1 saving throw modifier, a +1 bonus per die of damage, and range, duration, and area of effect are all as if the path master were one level higher than his actual level. He loses mastery only if he chooses not to learn a spell of that path when he gains an experience level, if he fails his roll to learn a spell of the path, or if he chooses to forget or skip a spell.

A wizard may never be a master of more than one single path at any time, but if he fulfills all the requirements for mastery in more than one path, the player may choose which path the wizard is a master of. The wizard may switch his choice of mastery whenever he learns a new spell in either path.

Wiping away paths

As an optional rule, paths that a wizard ignores may atrophy because the skills required are not kept up. Here’s the formula: If a wizard has not learned any new spells in a path by the time he finishes the experience level when two or more new steps have become available to him, his skill in that path stalls at the lowest level required to cast the spells he does know. For example, consider a wizard following the Stone Road who has attained 7th level—the point at which he becomes able to cast a fourth-level spell. If that wizard has not learned the third-level spell Maxmillian’s stony grasp or either of the fourth-level spells stoneskin or dig by the time he reaches 8th level, his progress on that path is forfeited, and thereafter he casts fist of stone and Maximillian’s earth gremp (the first- and second-level spells on the path) as if he were only a 3rd-level mage (since he has contented himself with casting only first- and second-level spells from the path). If a third step of spells becomes available and is ignored (wall of stone or stone shape in this example), the path is entirely forgotten.

Lost paths

The DM may designate one or more paths as lost, meaning that they are not available to most mages. Paths named after famous mages or monsters are especially good for this. Recovering and restoring such a path may become an adventuring goal for player characters.

Furthermore, particular settings may require their own paths: the provinces of sand, sea, flame, and wind in the AL-QADIM® setting certainly can be the basis of several good paths, because the elemental magics of that setting are even more carefully defined and interwoven than in the AD&D core rules (see “Customized campaign paths” below). The genies’ paths can easily be constructed using spells from the Secrets of the Lamp sourcebook, and elementalist characters will appreciate those paths as well.

In a FORGOTTEN REALMS campaign, the spells of the many powerful mages should serve as starting points for paths: Elminster’s, Snilloc’s, and the Simbul’s magics are all unique. These paths are given below as examples, but many others could be made to suit individual tastes and the needs of powerful mage characters and the DM’s wishes for a campaign.

Bigby’s, Leomund’s, and Mordenkainen’s paths are surely more common in the WORLD OF GREYHAWK® setting—where they were invented—than anywhere else. These individual variations are always up to the DM.
Sample lost paths

Path of the Drow, or Lothi's Road, or Spider Road: spider eyes (1, DU), spider climb (1), darkness 15' radius (2), skyhook (2, DU), web (2), dark wings (3, DU), hand of darkness (3, DU), intrusion (3), passweb (5, DU), summon spider (6, DU), vipertongue (6, DU), death spider (8, DU), black blade of disaster (9, DU)

Snilloc's Path: Snilloc's snowball (1, FA), Snilloc's snowball storm (2, FA), Snilloc's major missile (5, FA)

Simbul's Path: hypnotize (1), forget (2), suggestion (3), the Simbul's synastoid weomor (7, FA), steal enchantment* (7)

While path magic is intended for a traditional fantasy setting, it isn’t limited to that style of play. Sure, the lost paths of Toril could include the Road of Southern Magic of the Old Empires, or the magic of the elves of Evermeet, or the lost magic of Myth Drannor, or the forbidden fire magics of the Red Wizards of Thay. But much more exotic roads can be created if there are wizards willing to walk them. The dragons of Athas surely have their own powerful magics of desert survival. The PLANESCAPE™ setting could easily have Roads of Law and Chaos, and a Road of the Abyss. Each world will have its own magical traditions and cultures, but the patterns and system of magic presented here can readily be adapted to suit your preferences. Experiment!

Inherited magic

For long-term campaigns or for developing campaign history, players and DMs may want to consider making magic inheritable, that is, making certain families known for having an aptitude for certain forms of magic. Though this doesn’t reveal exactly what spells an NPC wizard has on hand, it does give player characters a general idea of what they can expect in this sense: a specific line of magic that presents a sort of NPC reputation to the players. For example, it allows characters to learn a general idea of potential allies or enemies by knowing something about the character’s ancestors (“Old Zeb, sure, he’s the son of Zackary, who was the son of Geoffry. Everybody knows they’re all enchanter, councilors, divining, and dragon mages.”) At the DM’s option, bards or PCs with the Spellcraft nonweapon proficiency may know the origin, ancestry, and genealogy of many of the paths of power, giving the PCs a valuable clue about what they may be up against. Although this might seem like an unfair advantage, the knowledge cuts in both directions. After all, these rules are meant to encourage players and DMs to act more like the mages of fantasy literature do. Player characters may be the sons and daughters of well-known lineages, the offspring of a mage’s house, with all the expected mage’s blood and mage’s gifts. As a result, players may be reluctant to reveal their true names to strangers for fear of giving valuable information about the character’s skills: and isn’t that what fantasy mages are all about?

Creating new paths

Players will soon want their characters to create spell paths of their own, but this is a difficult undertaking for any but the most powerful sorcerers. To create a new path, a PC wizard must list all the elements for the path, that is, all the spells that would comprise it—and the character must be able to cast all of them. The elements of the list must have some common bond: a certain school of magic, the form that the spells all take, their function, the spells’ inventor, or the like. If the DM approves, the wizard can begin researching. The cost of “path research” is the total number of spell levels in the path times 1,000 gp, and the time required is one week per each spell level in the path. The percentage chance of success is the mage’s level plus his Intelligence, minus the number of spell levels on the road. For example, if an 11th-level mage with Int 18 attempted to create a Path of Ice using the Snilloc’s spells (eight total levels), ice storm, and wall of ice (both fourth-level spells), the total levels would be 16, the cost would be 16,000 gp, the total time required would be 16 weeks, and the chance of success would be 11 + 18 - 16 = 13%. Researching paths is a chancy business at best, but a mage can keep trying over and over until he runs out of money.

Usually, a mage will invent a new path only to accommodate newly researched spells; most new spells can simply be assigned to existing paths based on similarity (for instance, a new series of skilling, water walking, and airwalking spells might require a new path). This does not mean that the newly researched spell is immediately available to all other wizards; paths are traditional series of spells, and mages learn them newly researched spells only slowly, as their inventor and his guide popularize the spells involved. Eventually, when the spell is widely known, it is adopted as part of the path. By then, the inventor is usually long dead.

Customized campaign paths

As samples of detailed, specialized paths for a campaign, examine the following lists for the AL-QADIM setting and the multiple paths for the necromancer. The Arabian Adventures provides a more detailed category of universal spells; these spells are included in the paths presented earlier in this article, as are the more general spells from the Complete Sha’ir’s Handbook. The more specific spell paths detailing the four elemental provinces of Zakhara are listed below.

Province of flame

The Brotherhood’s Road: burning hands (1), burning sand (1, SH), fire arrows (2, AA), fiery fists (2, SOL), flaming sphere (2), pyrotechnics (2), fireball (3), flame arrow (3), sunscorch (3, AA), sunfire (4, AA), Forest’s fiery constrictor* (6), delayed blast fireball (7), Malek-Keth’s flame fist* (7), sun stone (7, AA). Incendiary cloud (8), conflagration (9, AA), meteor swarm (9)

Flame Dancer’s Path: affect normal fires (1), pyrotechnics (2), smelting (2, SOL), fireproof* (3), fire shield (4), fire trap (4), wall of fire (4), flameproof (6, AA), Forest’s fiery constrictor* (6), elemental transmogrification (8, SH), wildfire* (9)

Firelight Path: dancing lights (1), fire truth (1, AA), banish dazzle (2, AA), sun dazzle (2, AA), dispel mirage (3, AA), fire charm (4), sunwarped (4, AA), fire track (5, AA), flame of justice (6, AA)

Road of the Efreeti: elemental guide (2, SOL), elemental form (4, SOL), protection from the elements (4, SOL), enhance fire creature (4, AA), conjure elemental (5), summon fire dragons (6, SOL), command element (7, SOL), unleash monolith (8, AA), elemental aura* (9), estate transference* (9)

Province of sand

Road of the Shifting Sands: detect metals and minerals (1, SOL), move sand (1, AA), sand jambiya (1, AA), dust curtain (2, AA), pillar of sand (2, AA), Maximillian’s earthen grasp* (2), entomb (3, SOL), hissing sand (3, AA), Maximillian’s stone grasp* (2), sand seal (3, SH), sand tools (3, SH), sandspray (3, SH), dig (4, AA), sand cone (4, AA), sand sword (3, AA), wall of sand (4, FA), desert fist (5, AA), move dune (5, AA), wall of stone (5), waves of sand (5, SH), move earth (6, part sand (6, AA), sand shroud (6, AA), river of sand (8, AA), sink (8)

Necromancy

As elaborated in the Complete Book of Necromancers, necromantic magic also has its own special feel. This is reflected in the many paths presented below. The core rule books provide a limited selection of necromantic magic, but with the details from the Complete Book of Necromancers and the necromantic spells of the Forgotten Realms Adventures and Complete Sha’ir’s Handbook expansions, NPC necromancers gain a much broader selection of spells—and correspondingly broader paths of power.

Bonebreaker’s Path: bone club (3, CW), skull trap (3, BN), bone blight (5, BN), throttling bones (5, CW), wall of bones (5, CW), blackmantle (6, CW), Grimwald’s gray mantle (6, FA), transmute bone to steel (6, BN)

Path of Blood: rain of blood (2, SH), Beltyn’s burning blood (4, FA), animate blood (6, SH)

The Reaper’s Road: chill touch (1), exterminate (1, BN), vampiric touch (3), enervation (4), brainkill (4, BN), death spell (6, BN), dusts of death (6, SH), finger of death (7), defoliate (8, CW), symbol of death (8), power word kill (9), death ward (9, BN), wail of the banshee* (9)

The Path of Scorn: corpse visage (1, CW), contagion (4), enervation (4), dead man’s eyes (6, CW), suffocate* (7), Abi-Dalzim’s horrid writhing* (8)

The Scabrous Road: chill touch (1), choke (2, CW), ghoul touch (2, CW), spectral hand (2), mummy touch (3, FA), pain touch (3, CW), vampiric touch (3), paralyze (3, FA), mummy rot (5, CW), ghoul gauntlet (6, BN), lich touch (6, FA), energy drain (9)

Conclusion

Use these rules to enhance the feel of AD&D game mages, and to broaden the scope of magic in your campaign. Special thanks to Svetozar Fung, Daniel Quarone, Christian Tapia, Josh Gerner, and Abram Connelly.
Critical hit tables from the Combat & Tactics book by Rich Baker & Skip Williams

Artwork by Jeff Easley

So you think you know everything there is to know about the AD&D® game. Well then, have you ever heard of a wizard character who could use a sword? How about paladins who cast spells before 9th level? Do you know about knockdowns, critical hits, or tenth-level magic?

This is just the beginning of what can be found in the PLAYER'S OPTION™ expansion books to the AD&D game. These brand-new hardbound books contain rules, systems, and ideas for your game that have never been published before. The PLAYER'S OPTION books were carefully designed to present sets of rules in easy-to-use modules. You can pick and choose which modules you like and incorporate them in your campaign. Regardless of which ones you decide to use, you'll find that everything works with everything else.

The first of these books, Combat & Tactics, provides all sorts of new systems that you can incorporate into your AD&D game battles to make them more exciting and move faster and more smoothly, while keeping bookkeeping nightmares to a minimum. When was the last time your 8th-level fighter did anything except plant his feet in front of a monster and trade blows and specific injuries. At its most basic level, the AD&D combat system is a contest of attrition that all boils down to who runs out of hit points first. Critical hits can change that.

This chapter presents two critical hit systems. The first is extremely simple: if you score a critical hit, you get to roll double damage. The second system is far more involved and takes into account the location of the hit, the severity of the wound, and the power of the attacker. Last (but certainly not least!) this chapter concludes with a few notes on the effects of specific injuries and how they can be healed.

Does this belong in my campaign?

While the rest of this book assumes that you'll be playing with the full critical hit tables and rules, you'll find that this chapter can be completely disregarded with no ill effects. More than anything else in this book, critical hits are optional; if the DM and players don't want them, the AD&D game works fine without them.

However, one thing is worth mentioning: if monsters have to suffer critical hits, so do player characters. Otherwise, game balance quickly goes out the window.

System I

Critical hits occur when a character rolls a natural 18 or higher and hits the target by a margin of 5 or more after all adjustments. If the character scores a critical hit, he inflicts double damage dice, calculated before adjustments for Strength, magic, or special circumstances.

For example, Liera is a 4th-level elven warrior fighting a gnoll. Liera's base THACO is a 17, but she has a 17 Strength (+1 to hit), she's an elf using a long sword (+1 to hit), and she has a magical long sword +2. Her total adjusted THACO is 13, and the gnoll’s Armor Class is 5. She will hit the gnoll on a roll of 8 or better, and can achieve a critical hit with a natural 18 or higher. On one combat round, she rolls a 19, which is a critical hit. She rolls 1d8 for damage and gets a 6, doubles that, then adds +1 for her Strength and +2 for her magical long sword, for a total of 15 ((6X2=12)+1+2).

After dispatching the gnoll, Liera finds herself facing a horrible tanar’ri with an AC of -3! She scores a hit on a roll of 16 or better. She cannot score a critical hit because it’s impossible for her to hit with 5 points to spare; even if she rolls a 20, she only hits by 4. If the tanar’ri charged, its AC would drop by one point to -2, and then Liera could score a critical hit with that roll of 20.

There are no specific injuries using this critical hit system. Instead, it only provides characters and monsters the chance to dish out extra damage when they make a great attack roll. Limiting the critical hits to attacks that hit by a margin of 5 or more solves one other problem. Consider the 1st-level fighter. He only hits on a 20 against an opponent with very good armor class (0 or lower). Under other critical hit systems, the few times he does hit, the fighter automatically inflicts a critical hit. Under this system, that can’t happen.

System II

The second, and more detailed, system for critical hits uses the same attack mechanic as the previous one. As above, the attacker must roll a natural 18 or higher and hit his opponent by a margin of 5 or more. However, the effects are determined by four factors: the attacker’s weapon size compared to the defender’s size, the type of weapon compared to the type of target, the location of the hit, and a roll for the injury’s severity.

Critical hit charts

There are three types of weapons: slashing, piercing, and bludgeoning. Every weapon in the AD&D game is assigned a type, with only a couple of exceptions such as lassoes and nets. If a weapon does not have a type, it cannot roll on a critical hit chart, although it can still inflict double damage on a critical attack roll.

The three weapon types are compared... to three target types, for a total of nine different critical hit charts. The target types are humans, animals, and monsters. In the following pages, you’ll find a chart for Bludgeoning vs. Humanoids, Bludgeoning vs. Animals, Bludgeoning vs. Monsters, Slashing vs. Humanoids, and so on. In most cases the correct critical hit chart to use should be relatively obvious.

Humanoids include anything that is generally shaped like a human, ranging from pixies to giants. If it has two arms and two legs, it’s probably humanoid.

Animals include anything that is a normal or giant-sized version of a normal animal. Mammals, reptiles, birds, and amphibians all fall into this category—but not insects or fish. It also includes monsters that are animal-like in form, such as blink dogs, winter wolves, moon dogs, hell hounds, nightmares, osquips, or fire toads.

Monsters include anything that doesn’t fit into one of the previous two categories. Giant insects of any kind, fishlike monsters, composite creatures such as manticores or sea lions, dragons, and weird things like xorn or leucrotas would all be considered monsters. If in doubt over whether something is a monster or not, call it a monster; this is the default category for things that defy classification.

Location
The critical hit charts require two die rolls: one to determine the location of the hit, and the other to determine the severity. Note that these can be rolled simultaneously. The location die is usually a single d10, but there are some exceptions.

Called shots: If a character hits with a called shot and scores a critical hit, the location die is ignored. The location is automatically determined to be wherever the character had been aiming.

Low attacks: If the attacker is fighting a creature two sizes larger or a defender with a distinct height advantage, use a single d6 for location. Head and upper torso shots become extremely unusual in these cases.

High attacks: If the attacker is two sizes larger than the defender, or has a significant height advantage, roll 1d6 + 4. Giants fighting halflings don’t strike low.

Severity
The second roll on the critical hit charts is for severity. The severity of a hit is determined by the relative size of the attacker’s weapon and the defender.

Weapon vs. target size Effect Dice

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Two sizes</td>
<td>&gt; target</td>
<td>Mortal 2d8</td>
</tr>

The dice indicated is the type rolled for that severity. For example, if a human armed with a long sword (size M) is fighting a gnoll (size L), he rolls 1d6 for the critical hit’s severity because the long sword’s size is smaller than the gnolls size.

If the weapon is two sizes larger than the target, it is possible to reach the 13 column on the chart. These hits inflict triple damage dice, even if the victim passes his saving throw to avoid the effects of the critical hit.

Resistance
Critical hits automatically inflict double damage dice, or triple damage dice if the weapon is two sizes larger than the target (see above). However, any effects beyond this can be avoided by a successful saving throw vs. death. For example, the critical roll may indicate an arm injury with minor bleeding, but if the victim makes his saving throw, no arm injury actually takes place. The character only suffers double damage from the hit. Obviously, this could be sufficient to mortally wound or kill a character anyway.

Some monsters are naturally resistant to the effects of certain critical injuries. Creatures such as golems, undead, or elementals don’t bleed and therefore ignore any such effects. A monster like a hydra can lose a head without being instantly slain. However, these injuries can still be important because it might affect the way a monster moves or attacks. A skeleton that’s had a leg knocked off can’t move at its full rate, even if it is less troubled by the injury than a living person would be. Slimes and jellies have no parts that are more specialized or important than the rest of the body, and are therefore immune to the effects of most critical hits. Use common sense to handle these situations as they arise.

Specific injuries
The critical hit charts include a number of specific injuries that go beyond a simple loss of hit points. Wounds are divided into five degrees of severity: grazed, struck, injured, broken, and finally shattered, severed, or crushed.

Wounds should be recorded on the character sheet. Attack and movement penalties remain until the injury that created the penalty has healed. Wounds always are accompanied by some loss of hit points, but a specific injury isn’t damage per se; consider it a temporary penalty that the character has to put up with until it is restored.

For example, Feodor the Bold is fighting an ogre armed with a club. The ogre scores a critical hit, rolling a 6 for location and a 7 for severity. Feodor’s torso has been struck, a wound that reduces him to 1/2 his normal move and gives him a -2 penalty to any attack rolls he makes. (It also puts a healthy dent in his nice plate mail.) Feodor’s penalties remain until he recovers from his “torso struck” specific injury.

Let’s say that Feodor had 16 hit points, and the ogre’s blow inflicted 12 points of damage. The missing 12 hit points can be recovered eventually, but Feodor’s penalties remain until the “torso struck” specific injury heals.

Severe injuries temporarily can reduce a character’s maximum allowable hit points. In other words, a fighter with a broken leg will not be allowed to enjoy his full allotment of hit points until his broken leg is healed. If the character has more hit points than he is currently allowed, he is reduced to the injured value when the current battle is over. This represents the increased vulnerability of badly wounded characters.

For example, if a fighter with 30 hit points receives 10 points of damage and an “arm destroyed” injury that reduces him to 50% of his normal hit points, he drops from 20 to 15 when the battle is concluded and remains at 15 until his ruined arm is somehow healed.

Grazed: Grazes are minor injuries that may prove troublesome if they bleed. A cure light wounds spell or other healing magic capable of restoring 4 hp will heal a graze. (The cure light wounds spell doesn’t have to actually restore that many points; it just must be capable of doing so.) Grazes also heal naturally as if they were a loss of 1d6 hp. In other words, if a graze is the equivalent of a 3-hp wound, two days of rest heal it completely, since characters normally recover 2 hp per full day of rest. Note that the graze isn’t tied to the character’s actual loss of hit points in any way. If a grazed character receives healing magic, the graze is healed and he gets to recover hit points.

Struck: A body part that has been struck is often penalized in a small way for the effects of the wound. For example, a critical hit that reads, “weapon hand struck, -2 penalty to attacks,” means that the character has a -2 attack penalty with his weapon hand until the wound is healed. Injuries of this type can be healed by a cure light wounds spell or other healing magic capable of restoring 5 hp of damage. Struck areas heal naturally as if they were a loss of 2d6 hp.

Injured: Wounds of this severity can trouble a character for weeks; they heal naturally as if they were a loss of 10d6 hp. A cure serious wounds spell or other healing magic capable of restoring 10 hit points can also repair the injury. Injuries almost always entail serious combat penalties for the wounded character.

Injured arms, legs, or tails reduce a character to 75% of his normal hit points. An injury to the abdomen, torso, or head reduces a character to 50% of his normal hit points. A 25-hp character with a chest injury can have no more than 13 hit points until his injury is healed (and could have a lot less than that if he continues to suffer damage!)

Broken: Broken bones run the gamut from minor fractures that don’t hinder a character at all to life-threatening compound fractures. Generally, the previous two injury categories are considered to include minor breaks or cracks; this category is reserved for severe fractures. Broken bones can be mended by a cure serious wounds spell that is devoted just to knitting the bone; unlike grazed, struck, or injured, the character regains no hit points from a spell used in this way. Broken bones heal naturally as if they were 2d6 lost hit points, so bed rest in the care of a proficient healer is a real good idea if the injured character is planning on resuming his adventuring career anytime soon.

Broken arms reduce a character to 75% of his normal hit points. Broken ribs or legs reduce a character to 50% of his normal hit points. Any other broken bones reduce a character to 25% of his normal hit points.

Crushed, Shattered, or Destroyed: Limbs that suffer this kind of catastrophic injury may never be usable again; hits to the torso, abdomen, or head of this magnitude are often lethal. If the victim survives, he will never recover naturally. A limb damaged this way will be useless for the rest of his life, and hits anywhere else will leave the victim incapacitated. The victim will be bedridden for at least one to eight months before he can even regain a semblance of mobility.

A cure critical wounds spell or other healing magic capable of restoring 20 hp of damage can repair the damage of this kind of injury. In addition, the bones of the affected area (if any) are assumed to be broken and may require another application of healing magic to repair.

Destroyed shoulders, hips, or limbs reduce the victim to 50% of his normal maximum hit points. Any other wounds of this magnitude reduce the victim to 25% of his normal total.

Severed: Obviously, a creature that has a limb severed can no longer engage in activities that require the use of that member. A human with a severed leg can't walk or run and is reduced to crawling until he gets a crutch. A character with a severed shield-arm can't use a shield anymore, and so on. The only way to undo this kind of damage is by means of a regeneration spell.

The shock of losing a limb will prevent a character from moving independently or attacking for 2d10 weeks. At the DM's discretion, a character who "only" loses a hand or a foot may actually be able to perform limited activities after being stunned 1d6 rounds, but only by passing a System Shock roll. However, characters who sustain such massive injuries are best-off abandoning the field to their enemies.

The loss of a limb will reduce a character's maximum normal hit points by 25% for a partial loss, or 50% for a more catastrophic loss. If the character can compensate with a wooden leg or hook, the hit point loss may be reduced by one step.

Critical hit effects

There are several possible effects of injuries caused by critical hits: bleeding, attack penalties, movement penalties, knockdowns, dropped weapons or shields, and possible armor or shield damage. Some of these conditions are temporary—a dropped weapon can be picked up while others remain until the injury that created the effect is healed.

Bleeding: A character with minor bleeding loses an additional 1d2 hp per full turn until the wound is bound or magically healed. In addition, there is a chance that minor bleeding will stop on its own. The character may roll a saving throw vs. death each time he suffers damage from minor bleeding; if he is successful, the bleeding stops.

Anybody can stop minor bleeding by applying a bandage or otherwise addressing the injury. This takes about 1d6 combat rounds, or a single one-minute round.

Major bleeding results in a loss of 1d2 hp per combat round until the wound is magically healed or bound. Left untreated, major bleeding can easily cause a character's death. In effect, the -10 hit-point rule represents major bleeding: the character loses 1 hp per round when reduced to negative hit points.

Major bleeding can be stopped by a cure light wounds spell (the victim recovers hit points, too), the healing of 5 hp of damage by any other magical means, or by a successful use of the healing proficiency. If the wound is bound by an untrained character, make an Intelligence check for the would-be medic. If he fails, he is unable to help. If he makes the check, the bleeding is reduced to minor.

Severe bleeding causes the victim to lose 10-60% (1d6 X 10%) of his original hit-point total every combat round. For example, if a fighter normally has 43 hit points but receives a severe bleeding result, he loses 4 hp (10%) to 24 hp (60%) in each round of severe bleeding. Needless to say, this is extremely lethal.

A cure light wounds spell (or 5 hp of healing) will reduce severe bleeding to major bleeding; a cure serious wounds spell (or 10 hp of healing) reduces it to minor bleeding; and a cure critical wounds or heal spell stops it altogether. An untrained character has no chance to bind a torso, abdomen, or head wound with severe bleeding, but a successful use of the Healing proficiency with a -4 penalty reduces severe bleeding to major bleeding.

Attack penalties: Many critical hits hamper the victim's ability to fight, resulting in an attack penalty. This is noted as applying to all attacks or to attacks with the particular limb that was injured. Other critical hits may prevent the victim from making attacks at all. If a critical hit prevents a character from making attacks, it also prevents him from casting spells or exercising any other combat action except moving or using magical items.

Movement penalties: Hits to the legs and body may penalize a character's ability to move. Usually, this is expressed as "1/2 move," "1/3 move," and so on. If the character's movement is limited, he may not charge, run, or sprint; he can move only by using the reduced rate. A character with no movement at all can still ride a mount with difficulty, or drag himself on the ground with an effective movement rate of 1.

Knockdowns: If a critical hit calls for a knockdown, the victim is still entitled to a saving throw to avoid falling down. See Knockdowns in Chapter One. [sic]

Armor and Shield damage: Some critical hits call for possible damage to a character's armor or shield. If the victim of the hit has no armor at that location, the blow is usually assumed to have more severe effects than if the character was protected. The armor descriptions in Chapter Seven deal with the coverage of each type of armor. [sic]

If the creature struck does have a shield or armor to deflect the blow, it may be damaged if the chart calls for it. First of all, the victim gets his normal saving throw roll to avoid the effects of the critical hit; if the roll is successful, there is no special effect for the hit. If the roll fails, his armor or shield must roll an item saving throw vs. normal blow with the number of points of damage (before doubling) used as a negative modifier for the save. If the attacker's weapon is larger than the defender (for example, a Size L halberd striking a Size M human), the save is rolled against a crushing blow, instead.

For example, remember the ogre's critical hit on poor Feodor? That result also called for possible armor damage. The ogre's club is Size L, so the item saving throw is against a crushing, not a normal, blow. Feodor is in plate mail, which has a saving throw of 7 vs. crushing blow. The ogre did 6 points of damage before doubling for the critical hit, so Feodor's armor is safe on a roll of 13 or more on a d20.

A damaged shield is useless. If armor is damaged, only the location struck is useless, and it no longer contributes to the overall AC of the suit. Refer to the rules for Partial Armor in Chapter Seven. In the example above, Feodor was struck on the torso. If his armor failed its item saving throw, only his breastplate would be ruined. A plate mail breastplate contributes 3 points to his AC, so Feodor's AC worsens from AC 3 to AC 6. Damaged equipment can be repaired by a skilled armoror or by magical means.

Reading the charts

First, find the appropriate table for the weapon type (slashing, piercing, or bludgeoning) and the target type (humanoid, animal, or monster). Then roll for hit location (d10) and severity (variable dice). Refer to the entry indicated on the chart. Remember, critical hits inflict double (or triple) damage dice, but any other effects can be avoided by a successful saving throw vs. death.

The specific types of injuries are described in the section following the charts.

in May.
This time, instead of engaging in one of our cheerful round robins of review with three manly (read crotchety) game designers providing insights (sniping) on the industry and each other’s opinions, you’ve just got me. I confess, my conscience has dogged me since I let my erstwhile companions do almost all the work the first time out (back in issue #212). Therefore, I’m sparing them the burden of labor this time.

So while Ken Rolston spends the month exploring the depths of video bios, IRQs, and DMA channels in his quest to discover why his new PC is the only one on the planet that locks up after five minutes of Doom (I’m sure we’ll hear more about that later!) and Paul Murphy rests his mighty and acerbic wit, I thought I’d review two games that cover that perennial favorite activity of computer games—killing things.

If you haven’t noticed, most game machines have styles and themes they do particularly well. Arcade machines excel at driving fast, flying fast, and killing things. Video games are strong on the running, jumping, and killing things kind of games. Computers are good at puzzles, simulators, and killing things. Notice a pattern?

Doom II
id Software
IBM PC (3.5" disk or CD-ROM)

Back when people made paper war games (oh, they still do?) there was a simple rule about what sold: NATO, nukes, and Nazis. Stick one, two, or even all three for a real stretch, into a game and supposedly it was a sure sell. It was a simplistic rule proven by the highly accurate reason that it sounded right.

Computer games need simplistic rules, too—and the best is: guns, gore, and a 3-D scrolling engine.

You see, I’ve been playing Doom II way too much.

Okay, let’s assume that you have lived under a rock for the last year or that you are one of the intellectual elite who is too busy reading and would never be caught anywhere near a computer monitor or a TV set. Of course, you never read game magazines, popular magazines, or most newspapers, all of which by now have written up and analyzed the Doom phenomenon. And of course, you never talk to your friends who have computers because you’ve noticed that they’ve all become zombified, twitching maniacs who debate the merits of chain saws versus chain guns.

If you’ve lived the life of a troglodyte, you need an explanation of what Doom is all about. It’s really quite simple. In Doom, you are a heroic soldier who wanders through mazelike corridors of a Martian base, opens doors to sealed rooms, and shoots things. Everything. If it moves, you punch, chain saw, pump lead, empty both barrels, blast, and fry it. Of course, the things you’re trying to kill are bad and tough and they are also trying to rend, shoot, and roast you, so it's all fair.

It's just not enough that you get to kill everything in sight. You also get to see the bullets hit and witness the bloody remains of your efforts—the very bloody remains. And you get to see all this first person in a 3-D world where you turn and move in any direction until you run into a wall, wade through a river of radioactive acid, or drop into a pit of lava. With music and sound effects to enhance it all, you wind up with gun-toting paranoia, which can be experienced by every human on the planet with a fast enough PC.

That's it. That's Doom.

And it's pretty much Doom II.

With Doom being the monster mega-hit that it is, the folks at id Software have come out with the marketer's answer to everything: If it worked once, do it again. Which is exactly what id did. Doom II isn't really a new game, it's more like new levels for the same game. Everything you loved or maybe hated about Doom is here: zombie soldiers, big pink demons, fireballing imps, gruesome deaths, the BFG-9000, and, of course, the chain saw. There's some new stuff added in the form of bigger bad guys like the Arch-Vile and the highly useful super shotgun, but the basic formula remains the same: If it moves, shoot it. True, the game is dressed up with a little bit of a story line—you're now going to Earth, where you must slaughter the possessed old tenants and the new occupants that have recently moved in from hell—but story line is not what this game was ever about. The story is just an excuse to kill things.

The network option is still there, so you can ruin job productivity for up to four people at once, either by going head-to-head or by cooperating as a team. There's the ability to play by modem, although that can be frustratingly slow. Use your modem instead to get playing tips and secret codes from a BBS.

Doom II is available as a CD-ROM, though it's obvious this is more a convenience to the publisher than any special benefit to you. Stick the disc in your CD-ROM drive, and the first thing it does is download the entire game onto your hard drive. After that, you can take the CD and hang it on your wall. Turn it shiny side out and pretend it's that platinum-record single you wrote in your spare time. The point here is, you're not getting anything special out of the CD-ROM disc, the publisher is. The disc is cheaper for them to mass-produce, but the peacock looks like a turkey if your machine is too slow. The box says it can be played on a 386/33 DX, which is like saying you can sit around and watch molasses pour if you like that sort of thing. Even slower 486's may leave you wishing for more. On the other hand, blitzing through the halls using a Pentium 90 is about as fast as any player could manage. This doesn't mean Doom II isn't fun, and if mindless but intense carnage is what you want, you'll get your money's worth. It's just not a must-have, keep-on-the-hard-drive-forever game. If you need to have more Doom, get this. If not, maybe you want to wait for the next big advance.

X-Com

Microprose

IBM PC (CD-ROM)

Imagine Earth is visited by aliens. Think of all the wonders and benefits we could gain through an exchange of ideas and technology. Wouldn't that be great?

Imagine Earth is visited by aliens with guns. Think of all the wonders and benefits we could gain by killing them and taking their toys before they kill us. Wouldn't that be . . . ?

Uh-huh.

Apparently that legendary first contact with intergalactic life didn't go so well. It was probably the result of a simple misunderstanding—the aliens dissected Joe Boy's best hunting dog, so he took them after them with a shotgun, to which they retaliated by melting him down to his shoes with one itsy-bitsy little plasma beam, and before you know it the whole dang world's up in arms. Whatever the cause, you can rest assured knowing just who's the bad guy—aliens are here to destroy life on Earth.

Well, you may scoff, but that's precisely the premise of X-Com from Microprose. In it you are the leader of X-Com, an international high-tech anti-aliens Delta Force. It's your job to defend the Earth from these intergalactic attackers, and the nations of the world have pooled their resources to help you do it. You take their cash to build an underground base, customizing it from a list of parts—hangars, workshops, radar arrays, missile batteries, storerooms, barracks, and the like. As you get more cash and the invaders get more aggressive (and they will), you can build new bases throughout the globe, siting them wherever you want. In the future the world will be a model of international cooperation-Russian-based fighters will dogfight UFOs over Beijing without a glimmer of protest. It's one of those hidden benefits of alien invasion.

Of course, a bunch of underground bases isn't enough. You've got to buy fighters, transports, rifles, rocket launchers, grenades, ammunition, even tanks. Then, you've got to recruit soldiers to use those weapons, scientists to invent you new to plan ahead, because nothing happens not to mention packing the excess off to actually send out your teams unarmed—and what to build. And then you've got to teams and tasks, tell them what to invent, then you've got to assign them to their ones, and engineers to build them. And then you've got to assign them to their tasks, tell them what to invent, and then you've got to assign weapons out of stores to the different transports and fighters so you don't actually send out your teams unarmed—
not to mention packing the excess off to other bases and scrapping derelict equipment, all the while watching your budget.
You do this once, you do this twice, you do this for every base you have in the game which can be quite a few.

Oh, and did I mention planning? You've got to plan ahead, because nothing happens immediately. At this stage X-Com is played in "real" time, which means you can make the computer days and hours go as fast or slow as you want until something exciting happens. Computer days pass between choosing what you want and having it actually show up. If you need replacement troopers to fill out a squad, you better have thought of that in advance.

If you think this doesn't sound like a lot of fun, you're right. The gameplay is hindered by the need to click through layers of screens (everything in X-Com is done with a mouse) and to repeat the same tasks over and over again for different bases. At this stage of the game useful information is lacking, like what you've already bought (but not received) and how long it will take to get it. Furthermore, there are several frustrating features—such as buying a tank but not being allowed to use it because you forgot to buy ammo or, worse still, being told you can't use it because you don't have enough ammo but not being told how much more you need. Think 50 rounds of tank shells is enough? Maybe, maybe not. Little help is given in placing new bases, such as your current coverage and operating ranges.
The only advice is to check the graphs of UFO activity against those nations that give you money. Fail to take care of the UFOs attacking them, and they lower their contributions.

Fortunately, X-Com is not all a game of quartermaster, supply, and the other parts work much better. X-Com is a game of Earth defense, so things heat up when the aliens arrive. To paraphrase Winston Churchill, you will fight them in the air;
you will fight them on the beaches.

Air combat is simple. While time passes (at the rate you choose) you wait for UFOs to appear on a globe of the world you can spin, tilt, and zoom in on. When your radars pick up incoming UFOs, you have to decide what fighters to scramble and what their attack modes should be. Do you just want to observe and track, make a cautious stab, or hit them quick and hard?
The answer's obvious—that good offense equals good defense thing. Get in there and take them out before they can land and cause havoc. Blow 'em up in the sky or force 'em to crash but don't let 'em gain a beachhead.

Whether they land safely or crash, you're going to have to send a team in, and the tactical combat is the heart of the game. X-Com's real goal is to have you take command of a squad of soldiers who go in to deal with those bloodthirsty aliens. The real action begins when your Skyranger transport lands and it's time to disembark your assault squad. The X-Com team obviously has played a tactical war game or two, because their system shows they know their stuff. Instead of trying to reinvent the gaming wheel, they have taken concepts and techniques from paper war games and have adapted them wisely to the computer. The result is a game that emphasizes planning and strategy, not arcade-honed reflexes.

The first thing they did is get rid of "real" time. Ground combat is played in clearly set out turns. Each turn you issue orders to your soldiers from a simple menu. You can move them across the map, change their facing, ready weapons, throw grenades, shoot at targets they can see, or have them hold fire until something comes into view. Every action costs movement points from the soldier's total, and soldiers have different totals and costs, reflecting their strengths and weaknesses. Once you've given all the commands you want, you end the turn and let the computer work much better.

This alone would make for a fine game, but X-Com uses the computer's strength to build on that by adding hidden movement.
A soldier can shoot only what he can see, and X-Com shows just what he can see in a simple, clear way. The battle map isn't a top-down view like in a paper war game.
Instead, the computer shows the player an orthographic view, like you're on a nearby hill looking down on the action. Buildings, walls, and trees are shown in perspective, so it's easy to see just what is blocking your line of sight, especially since the computer only shows you things that at least one of your squad can see.

Your range of sight isn’t endless, either. The computer will show you the scenery and enemy movement only out to a limited distance. Missions can happen during day or night (remember that “real time” business?), and at night your soldiers are going to feel like lonely pools of light in the darkness. You’ll quickly learn the value of lobbing a few flares into the darkness.

Finally, the designers paid attention to the details that make tactical combat games fun. Your soldiers can go in buildings and up stairs, fire out windows, blow openings in walls, kneel behind cover, go berserk, and just plain panic. The aliens come in a variety of types and are armed with appropriate alien hardware, all better than what you start with. In fact, one of your objectives is to get and research these weapons so you can turn them on your intergalactic foes.

_X-Com_ is a fine game for those who want a lot more thought in their carnage, something beyond the run-into-the-room-and-shoot-everything-in-sight school of strategy. For this it’s the best you’ll find out there right now. Would an RPG had such a well-honed combat model. It is unfortunate that the game is burdened with the save-the-earth’s-resources and budget-management plot lines instead of expanding the range of tactical scenarios you face. The game wants you to be sergeant, general, and quartermaster, all rolled into one. Tactician, definitely; strategist, maybe; but logistics is what staffs were created for. I’d rather lose a game through bad tactics than because I couldn’t balance the books.

Happy New Year! A little late, I know, but it is 1995 and, thankfully, 1994 is long gone for all eternity. Thank goodness! The miniatures industry was on shaky ground for too long. That Card game, "you know the one", took the country by storm, forcing all the Game Companies to reassess their priorities.

Well anyway, we ended the year on a good note. We have a lot of exciting projects on the board this year. I can not tell what yet. It's a surprise.

What I can tell you is very good news! We will NOT increase our prices this year. Yeah!

We knew you would be thrilled. The truth is we realize how big a price increase you had to swallow when we went to Lead Free metal and we can appreciate how hard it was to take. When you buy toys they are supposed to be fun. Taking out a second mortgage on your house to buy a Battletech miniature is definitely not fun.

In lieu of all of that, we want to thank you for your continued support. Those of you who patronized Ral Partha over the years and have come to expect a raise in prices this time of year, can rest easy.

As a second note, the 1995 Ral Partha Catalog is now available. Talk to your local Game/Hobby store or give us a call.

ERRATA

It has been brought to our attention that in our last misive (appearing in issue #212 of DRAGON® Magazine) we neglected to mention one of our Canadian Distributors for Retail Stores. (The Great Partha evidently was 'Seer'-ing something else at the time.) We would like to correct this gross oversight on our part at this time and call your attention to:

Great Seer of The Partha Chronicle

A Drumbat in the distance... The smell of rendering fat and swamp in the air... I see... a wart. No. Wait. I see a bunch of warts... And pusses, I definately see pusses. The mists of Space and Time are clearing. Ahhh! It is the return of the Trolls, I sense! Gone from the ken of man for 'lo these past hundred years, the Troll-kind have returned to wreak their vengeance on the lands of men.

A dark day is at hand and any that would remain free (and indeed, retain their entrails!) must set aside current jealousies and strive to join forces against the coming tide of war.

You can send us news, press releases, and announcements using the Internet at TSR.mags@genie.geis.com. We welcome your comments at Rumblings, DRAGON® Magazine, 201 Sheridan Springs Rd., Lake Geneva WI, 53147, U.S.A.

Lead Story:
BLOOD WARS™ game kills ‘em
A report from the recently held Toy Fair convention states that TSR Inc.’s new collectible BLOOD WARS card game is a bloody-good hit. Designed by TSR staffer Steven Schend, the game’s first print run reportedly sold out at the Toy Fair, where the cards were officially debuted. The game is being reprinted and should be available by the time you read this. (How many other games have sold out before they even got to store shelves?)

Game resurrected
Hogshead Publishing, in conjunction with Games Workshop Ltd., will reprint the WARHAMMER FANTASY ROLEPLAY* game sometime this spring, with four supplements to follow within the year. Using the slogan “Chaos Never Sleeps,” Hogshead will publish new material as well as the best of the old stuff.

In addition to the WARHAMMER game, also be on the lookout for the BUGTOWN* role-playing game from Hogshead. The BUGTOWN RPG is based on the comics of Matt Howarth.

Ahoy, mate
Former West End Games’ staffer Ed (Ted) Stark has left the publishing seas in Pennsylvania to join the swashbuckling crew of TSR’s game department. Welcome aboard, Ted!

Bloodsucking books
White Wolf and Wizards of the Coast will be releasing a series of novels based on the JYHAD* card game. The first novel will be written by James A. Moore and Kevin Andrew Murphy. The new Sonja Blue book, Paint it Black, by Nancy Collins also will be out soon.

Talsorian tomes
In more book news, R. Talsorian Games has announced new deals for novel lines for both the CYBERPUNK* game (with Time/Warner) and the CASTLE FALKENSTEIN* game (with Prima Press). Rumors have it that at least one of the novels will be penned by Talsorian game guru Mike Pondsmith.

Retraction retracted
It seems our “correction” in the Rumblings column of issue #214, which stated that Dirt Merchant Games and White Wolf were not going to produce a second edition of Dirt Merchant’s HOL* game was incorrect. The two companies will be producing said game after all. This all obviously was just a masterful scheme by the Wolfers and the Merchants to get not one, but three mentions of that product in this column. The new version of HOL will be published by Black Dog Games, the Wolfers imprint for mature-audience games.

Goodies galore

Below is a smorgasbord of news and product announcements regarding some of our fave games or game folks in the industry—listed in no particular order, of course:

Thunder Castle Games, producers of the TOWERS IN TIME* collectible card game, has acquired the HIGHLANDER* game license. Expect to see a HIGHLANDER card game (as mentioned in issue #214) and an RPG, maybe by this year’s GEN CON® Game Fair. (Speaking of the Game Fair, Thunder Castle may be bringing the HIGHLANDER TV show’s star, Adrian Paul, to the convention.)

West End Games has sold the rights to produce first-edition TORG* game products to Omni Gaming Products. West End plans to bring the Possibility Wars to an end, possibly producing a “post-war” second edition product as part of its MASTERBOOK* line.

The first supplement for Pariah Press’ way-cool WHISPERING VAULT* horror RPG is out. The DANGEROUS PREY* book is a 112-page “mixed-bag” collection of GM advice, additional powers for Shadows and the Unbidden, 32 new Shadows for your PC stalkers to encounter, plot hooks, and a full adventure. Pariah plans much support for the game, including a GM screen package (with a full adventure) that should be available by the time you read this, and a Stalker’s Guide later this year. Also, look for Pariah’s new RPG at this year’s GEN CON Game Fair.

Look in your stores now for the new GURPS* CTHULHU PUNK* book, co-produced by Steve Jackson Games and Chaosium. Take the dystopian future of the cyberpunk genre and add the Lovecraftian grue of the Cthulhu mythos and what do you get? One heck of a fun-sounding game!

Also available now is a noncollectible card game from WotC. It’s called THE GREAT DALMUTI* game, and it’s based on a playing-card game known by numerous names. (We played this game in college where it was known as “Jerk.”) Regardless of its origin, the game’s a blast.

Speaking of card games, WotC and White Wolf are publishing the RAGE* game, based on the WEREWOLF* RPG. The game debuts in May.

More magazine mayhem

Calamities and confusion continue to abound in TSR’s Periodicals Department. An on-the-job computer accident has led Kim Mohan, Editor-in-Chief at DRAGON Magazine into believing he is a skunk. Doctors have so far been unable to reverse the effects. In other animal news, Wolf Baur has gone rabid and recently has been caged at the local Timberwolf Society, due to his unusual spurs of hair growth and frothing at the mouth. Friends may visit him there. After watching one too many episodes of the X-Files, Michelle Vuckovich apparently has been abducted by aliens, although no one outside the department seems to have noticed. Art director Larry Smith has left the magazine department to pursue a career as an Elvis impersonator—Best of luck, Larry! Dale Donovan seemingly snapped under the pressure of his imminent transfer; it seems that he now wishes to be known as Debbie Donovan. Renee Ciske, the only remaining sane member of the staff has fled to TSR’s graphics department and could not be reached for comment. The rest of the staff has been sacked—for obvious reasons.

As the adventure gaming hobby has matured, so have its adherents. Adolescents have all the time in the world to pursue their (admittedly absorbing) hobby, but as they age they find themselves pressed for time. Fellow gamers move away to college or get married. Somehow, the old gang finds it harder and harder to get together. Eventually, it quits meeting altogether. How sad. And how typical.

There seems to be an interest these days in what makes a playing group stick together. What makes one group last? How can one prolong "the good old days"? In response, I only have my own experiences to offer. I was part of a playing group that stayed together for 11 years.

Many players came and went in those 11 years, but the core of our group always remained: Kevin; Jessi; Phred; Deanne; myself. Three of us just happened to be clergy or ministerial students; now, four of us are. (My wife is the only one of us who has any sense.) I had recently graduated from seminary when our group of friends got together for a day of playing games in that fall of 1978. We had brought various strategy games, and played a couple. Then it was Kevin's turn to pick the game we would play. He started us off on a new game, whose rules weren’t even complete: something called the ADVANCED DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game. We were hooked.

We didn’t intend to make the group last as long as it did, nor was it apparent then that we five would be the ones to keep it going. There is a large element of luck in all this. But beyond luck, there are things that make groups survive—and there are things that make groups die. Trying to keep together a group that’s ready to die can be a frustrating experience, but more of us have experienced the greater frustration of seeing a group die that had a lot of life left in it.

During our time as a playing group, we had children, moved (frequently), saw Jessi go off to college, and saw me start a PhD and Phred three different Master’s programs. What finally broke us up was Kevin & Jessi’s move to North Carolina for three years so Jessi could attend seminary there. I guess the move made people who need to be told (in a kindly, but firm fashion) that they really can start there, but it cannot stay there and go off to college, and saw me start a PhD and Phred three different Master’s programs. What finally broke us up was Kevin & Jessi’s move to North Carolina for three years so Jessi could attend seminary there. That was just too far for us to link up—but we made it 11 years, Since that time, I’ve done a lot of thinking about what made our experiences together so much fun—and so durable. Here are 12 pieces of advice derived from that reflection.

Our friendship had been established before we started playing the AD&D game together. This was a great help. We truly enjoyed each other’s company, and saw each other outside of the gaming environment (and still do). Thus, our gaming simply was one more thing we enjoyed doing together.

This is not meant to devalue the friendships that grow up out of a common interest in role-playing games. We all meet new friends by way of the interests we have in common. But I have turned down more than just an interest in the game. It is not just munchies. Chip in your share of provender. On the other hand, that means the younger ones need to be extra-helpful when it comes time to do the dishes or vacuum the carpet. Remember, we’re talking about how to create a long-lasting playing group; don’t wear out your welcome!

Play regularly

Keeping a campaign going requires regular gaming time. Without it, interest

This is not such a big deal in your teenage years, when you seem to have an infinite amount of time to “hang out” with your peers. The way America does schooling largely accounts for this: at no other time in your life are you thrust together—socially—with so many other people in similar life situations. And you will never again have this much time to goof around with your friends until you retire.

The new pressures of college, work, and marriage (i.e., the “Adult World”), require us to learn how to organize and manage our time differently. We all must come to terms with the tyranny of the calendar and the clock. Blessed are those whose “I’ll be there,” means precisely that, for they shall never lack for friends.

In our group, while many players came and went, we five stayed committed to each other, and our mutual responsibility kept our fun alive. Once we had agreed upon a playing date, it went on our calendars and became as important as any other work or family date listed. Only rarely did something so important come up that we had to reschedule or cancel.

Being responsible also includes not neglecting work, chores, or schoolwork in order to play. These conditions tend to lead to personal crises that will have an adverse effect upon any neglectful members of your group—and thus, your group as a whole.

Include significant others

Not everyone who loves you loves your hobbies. A major source of conflict in new marriages, for instance, is old friendships or activities that the new partner does not share in—especially if they cost money. New sweethearts/spouses always have to make their peace with what competes for their partner’s time. Nor is this restricted to RPGs. Golf, poker, even church, all can wind up being resented by the partner who opts out of (or is excluded from) them.

We were fortunate that all our partners were in sympathy with our hobby. (One could’ve taken or left the game, but she soldiered on for years and does not regret it. It was fun—but it could very easily not have been.) Invite these newcomers. Show them a good time. And if they don’t want to participate, remind the partner who does that she needs to work out ways of compensating for time spent with these friends doing this activity.

A new gamer is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. But a jealous partner is a threat to the life of your group. Don’t make people jealous. Get them on your side by any means you can.

Be courteous

RPGs take a tremendous toil on a house and refrigerator. Papers, cushions, and pizza crusts often are strewn everywhere by the end of a playing session. It is fundamental to a long-lasting relationship of any sort that one does not impose on the same people in the same way all the time.

That doesn’t mean you have to move your playing site around (although we often did). It does mean that you need to help clean up. It also means that the host shouldn’t be responsible for feeding everybody every time. Bring food—real food, not just munchies. Chip in your share of money when it’s time to order out. Don’t mooch.

When younger gamers play with older gamers (an arrangement we welcomed, I might add), the older gamers might not expect the younger ones to provide a full share of provender. On the other hand, this is not such a big deal in your teenage years, when you seem to have an infinite amount of time to “hang out” with your peers. cannot be sustained; no one knows where their characters are or what is going on. Regular play is more important than intense play in this regard.

We fell into the habit of meeting more or less monthly (anywhere from three to six weeks apart). Meeting weekly would have put too great a strain on our frantically busy lives, while meeting less regularly would have made the campaign's continuity suffer.

Distance was not the factor one might think for us. We all were adults with cars. We kept the group going when a two-hour drive was involved for at least one member of the group. Most of the time, however, we were all employed within an hour's drive or so of the meeting place.

Budget time

When you're only playing 10 or 12 times a year, you just can't mess around. The time has to count for something. At first, we tried staying overnight at each other's homes. We would arrive the night before and game until all hours, then get up and go at it until early afternoon. We soon got tired of this, though.

Eventually, we developed a different pattern. We would gather on the appointed day by noon and begin with lunch. Last session's treasure would be shared out, and preparations for this day's session would be made. By the time lunch was cleared away, we were ready to roll those dice. We would play steadily to (and sometimes including) supper. By early evening, we were wrapping up. Sometimes this required us to "freeze time" in the middle of an adventure.

Thus, we usually spent four or five good solid hours gaming, and we found this sufficient for our purposes. We appointed someone in our group to be in charge of divvying up treasure, and he would come to each session with various lots of treasure ready to be shared out. We would then roll dice and choose. Haggling with each other was a waste of time, so we forbore haggling. The experience points due from treasure (if not known beforehand) also were announced by the treasure accountant. Likewise, someone was always the official experience drudge: at the end of the session, the DM would go through the monsters killed (and treasure, time permitting) and give out numbers, which would be crunched by the experience drudge, who would announce each person's share. The DM did not give out extra XP to individual players. We figured we were all good players and singling out individuals was pointless; besides, it took time we didn't want to spend on it.

Share leadership

Not only did we share the bookkeeping chores concerning experience and treasure, we shared refereeing and design. Over the 11 years, we played in several different campaigns, including one that ran for four or five years (real time). Each campaign had a different DM. But we also shared leadership among the players even in the middle of a campaign. We not only planned out the details of our characters, we often planned out their home towns (with the DM's blessing). We also pitched in with rules. I was the resident psionics expert, so I often helped conduct psionic combat, even when I wasn't the DM; another player was the only guy who could understand the weaponless combat rules, so we left them to him. This takes trust, but trust comes out of the kind of relationships upon which long-term groups depend.

As we chose our characters for each campaign, we tended to complement, rather than compete with each other's choices. That way, each of us had strengths to offer the party that others didn't, and no one could hog the glory.

Make the game your own

We started playing the AD&D game long before the current welter of printed campaign settings and modules. The core rule books weren't even all in print yet. This was tremendously liberating to our imaginations. Along the way, we played various "canned" adventures (and some were very good), but there is a certain sameness to the published modules available. When you come right down to it, there's nothing like building your world and adventures from scratch.

I am convinced that depending too much on published adventure material results in superficial engagement with the fantasy world. One tends to race through adventure after adventure, acquiring a "been there, done that" kind of attitude. What's the next thrill?

There is nothing to match the texture and depth of a world that a competent DM has lovingly created. It is something you can enter into without getting tired of. This may be only to say that the more you put into your game, the more you will get out of it. That's a cliche; but it is also profoundly true.

Our worlds and campaigns were not made only by us (and thus engaged our deepest levels of creativity), they were made for us; each DM took the players who would be investigating this campaign world into account in the very creation of it. We "fit" into our fantasy worlds in a way no one can really "fit" into RAVENLOFT® or DARK SUN® campaign (which is not to say that those aren't good and helpful products). That's something that makes one want to come back for more.

Remember why you're there

When we discovered the AD&D game in 1978, we were all adults. We all were well-read in the literature of fantasy and science fiction, and we had more than a smattering of philosophy, history, religion, science, and whatnot to call upon in our play. We were delighted with the game because it allowed us to enter the kinds of worlds we had previously only read about. This is the joy that J.R.R. Tolkien named "sub-creation."

It troubles me to see what seems to be a major shift among the young gamers of today in how they use the FRPG format. We always had seen the rules and game constructs (e.g., the cleric character class) as mere conveniences; what we did with them was to enter the world of heroic fantasy. But gamers today who have been introduced to the world of fantasy through FRPGs see it differently; for them, the rules and game constructs are often the primary reality.

We enjoyed using the AD&D game to play at being vikings or Arthurian knights or the dwarves out of The Lord of the Rings. And if the rules didn't describe those possibilities exactly, we adjusted. We made it up. But I see kids today who wonder what sort of AD&D game wizard Merlin is: not would be, but is. These kids read the rule books before they read the stories that inspired the games. That means their palates have been trained in some strange ways.

In a module outline I once submitted to TSR, Inc., I attempted to take the party into the Garden of Hesperides out of Greek mythology. To be successful, a player would have to sense that she had really stood in that wonderful place, and reached out his hand to grasp the Golden Apples of the West. Quite an undertaking—but how if it were to succeed? Would this not be a worthy adventure?

Since I had no AD&D game stats for the kind of beings the triple moon goddess' avatars would be, I adapted. In one of her phases, she would appear more or less as a bag, I guessed. So I had a bag in the module, as a means of representing this legendary encounter in game terms. The editor's cryptic comment in the margin was, "Did bags?" meaning that a recent module had featured this creature.

We are reduced to that. No longer do we find many gamers for whom the rules and game constructs provide a magical key to enter the worlds they have longed for all their lives. I meet far more who know only the games themselves. The result is that they either become bored, or they burn out on gaming quickly. They run through all the neat stuff published, and it's just not enough. They eat and eat, but are still hungry. They cannot see the legendary being the monster stats represent, but only more and more stats.

This is important if you want to build a long-term campaign or playing group. You must find ways to reach into the wealth of fantastic lore and find the primary core of that literature. That well is not likely to run dry, whereas the savor of the published material or your pocket money assuredly will.
Be a team

One of the things I am proudest of in our playing experience was our track record of cooperation. We faced danger bravely for each other. We shared treasure unselfishly. We were not greedy. And we never, ever played characters who stole from each other or tried to fight each other.

Most adolescents pass through a negative stage on their way to positive self-image. This is expected, and we all make allowances for each other. But I have no patience at all for the immature gamer who derives pleasure from “role-playing” an anti-social, disruptive character. This is merely attention-getting behavior, using the game to boost the real person’s presence among real people under color of the game character who stands in for him.

This is not to say we didn’t occasionally play characters with divergent interests, and even some shady alignments. But implicit in the social contract that brings the characters together must be something that makes them work together as a team. This may not be so important in one-shot sessions or tournaments, but it is absolutely vital in building a group that is going for the long haul. Egotistic or pain-in-the-butt characters are not fun for the other players to deal with, and the group will wind up either expelling their owner or dissolving.

Do long-range design

A group that seeks the long-lasting game experience should plan for long-lasting campaigns. That means that you have to work out what the new party is trying to accomplish (even if the PCs don’t know yet).

A campaign is not just a string of adventures. It must be bound together by a common theme, a long-range goal. Various short-range goals and personal character goals will provide diversity within the campaign, but there must be something the whole thing is about.

Likewise, characters should be provided with long-term goals beyond merely climbing to maximum level. Without these personal character goals, running a character becomes boring. After you’ve played everything, and run several characters up to the top, what’s left to excite you—character development, that’s what.

When the campaign matures, it’s time to conclude it and start something else. When the character matures, it’s time to retire him. Trying to keep getting the same bang out of a played-out quest or demigod-ranked characters is boring. A long-lasting playing group requires a change every now and then.

Once in a while, the group needs to do something different with its time. Especially between campaigns, the same old thing can be particularly dull and lifeless. We tried miniatures battles, one-shot sessions with old characters, canned tournament modules, and even playing an entirely different game for the day. All of these activities give the members of the group the pleasure of being together and playing, without having to be accomplishing something. Eventually, someone comes up with a new campaign idea, and the members can get excited about designing new characters for it.

Conclusion

Not all of these suggestions may be appealing—or even possible—to all gamers and all groups, but they describe our group as we were. And our track record is none too bad, I’d say.

Would I do it again? We’re all very busy now—more so than ever, and life is even more complicated. And yet, my answer is yes; I would like to belong to a group that derived the kind of fun from each other’s company that our group once did. And who knows? Maybe it will come to pass. I hope that something like it will come to pass for you. And I can truthfully say, I wouldn’t have missed it for all the worlds there are to adventure in.

My thanks, as always, to everyone who's taken the time to write. Your comments—such as those from Herman Liebson, Jeremy Richard, April Wilson, Stefon DellPiano, and Joe Kushner—have given me enough ideas for a book full of columns. Heck, I don't even mind when you point out my errors, like when Evan Franke of Sacramento, Calif., who noticed that I attributed authorship of a Farewell to Arms to Thomas Wolfe instead of Ernest Hemingway (in DRAGON® Magazine issue #210). Be informed, however, that I will no longer include intentional mistakes for your amusement.

What else is in the mailbag? A lot of you want information about specific games, such as publisher addresses and adventure recommendations (which I'm happy to provide). Others want to share their opinions on products not covered in the column (which I always get a kick out of). Still others want feedback on their manuscripts-in-progress (which I rarely feel qualified to give). I've also noticed the same theme cropping up again and again, mentioned in maybe half of the last hundred letters. To save everyone else a stamp, let's answer them here:

How do I get my article published in DRAGON Magazine? For starters, don't send it to me. Send it to the editor. And if you haven't seen the writer's guidelines, it's a good idea get them first. (Forward a self-addressed envelope to the editor and ask for them.)

What's the best game for a novice? The best entry-level fantasy RPGs include the classic DUNGEON & DRAGONS® game (the one in the brown box, released last year), Iron Crown's LORD OF THE RINGS® game, and Flying Buffalo's TUNNELS & TROLLS® game. Beginners with a taste for the bizarre might sample R. Talsorian's CASTLE FALKENSTEIN® game (reviewed in issue #214) or Steve Jackson's TOON® game. Beginners with a taste for the bizarre might sample R. Talsorian's CASTLE FALKENSTEIN® game (reviewed in issue #214) or Steve Jackson's TOON® game. (I'm surprised how often this question comes up; must be a lot of baffled beginners out there.)

How many games do you own? I've never counted, but a lot. Let me put it this way: they have a room in my house all to themselves. (I use this to think I was the most popular guy in the neighborhood because of my sparkling personality.)

Anyway, on to the business at hand, which this month takes us into the realm of deluxe expansion sets. These lavish, goodie-packed boxes make hard-core players tremble in ecstacy at the thought of exploring the worlds inside. Some worlds, of course, are better than others.

Masque of the Red Death and other Tales

ADVANCED DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game supplement for the RAVENLOFT® setting

One 128-page book, three 32-page books, one three-panel referee screen, one 21" X 32" map sheet, one 21" X 32" poster, boxed

Design: William W. Connors with D.J. Heinrich, Colin McComb, and Shane Hensley
Editing: Anne Brown, Jonatha Ariadne Caspian, and Richard Pike-Brown

So the guys and gals at TSR, Inc., were sitting around at a staff meeting, wracking their brains for new product ideas, when a neon sign flickered to life over the head of William Connors, spelling out VICTORIAN ROLE-PLAYING GAME. Then he remembered the less than enthusiastic reception given to previous Victorian RPGs, like GDW's SPACE: 1889® game; the sign spit out a few sparks and blew up. When it was his turn to speak, Connors mumbled a few cryptic comments about, er, a RAVENLOFT® campaign expansion, maybe something with Jack the Ripper and foggy streets and hand gun rules, and he'd get back to them as soon as he compiled the glass fragments out of his hair.

Okay, I made all that up. (April Fool?) But whatever its origin, Masque of the Red Death is cause for celebration, especially for players whose AD&D® game campaigns have gone stale. Not exactly the RAVENLOFT setting and not exactly a new game, Connors' little mutant is the most provocative AD&D variant since the SPELLJAMMER® campaign.

Red Death refers not to the Edgar Allen Poe story, but to a malevolent entity spawned in ancient Egypt during the "golden age of magic." As malevolent entities will do, it proceeded to wreak havoc for a few thousand years, prompting violence and catalyzing disasters. By the late 19th century, the era in which the game unfolds, the world totters on the edge of the abyss. Enter the player characters, poised to challenge the Red Death and its minions. "If [the PCs] fail, then the inhabitants of Gothic Earth may well be doomed to an age of darkness and war more terrible than any before." Connors paints the setting in gaudy colors, combining real-world history with legends and literature. Thus, necromancers practice dark arts among the slave traders of New Orleans, while Buenos Aires agricultural barons attempt to squelch rumors of monstrous winged serpents. Spirit creatures stalk the settlers of the American West. Sherlock Holmes shares a railroad car with Count Dracula. Unlike the basic RAVENLOFT setting, where mysterious mists divide the realm into distinct settings, the Gothic Earth setting has no divisions. Because men and monsters can travel wherever they like, the referee has access to the entire planet for supernatural slugfests.

Balancing blood-soaked imagery with humorou florishes (a backfired spell might give the caster a forked tongue). Masque deftly combines the gloom of White Wolves VAMPIRE: THE MASQUERADE* game and the whimsy of R. Talsorian's CASTLE FALKENSTEIN® game. Though Masque would've benefited form a tighter focus—why not just concentrate on Europe instead of struggling to cover the whole world?—there's more to embrace than complain about.

Still, Masque's drawing card isn't the Victorian setting. As good as it is, we've here before, not just in CASTLE FALKENSTEIN, but also in Chaosium's Cthulhu by Gaslight (an expansion for the CALL OF CTHULHU® game) and TSR's own For Faerie, Queen, and Country (an expansion for the AMAZING ENGINE® game). The main attraction is the game system.

Masque begins by jettisoning the traditional character classes, replacing them with soldiers (they're like fighters, but can't specialize in favored weapons), adepts (wizards with limited magic and no school specialization), mystics (priests with limited magic), and tradesmen (like thieves, but without Climb Walls, Pick Locks, and other thief abilities.) All player characters must be human. Additionally, they're encouraged to select character kits from a list of down-to-earth vocations such as Cavalkyman, Journalist, and Laborer. Nonweapon proficiencies, optional in the standard AD&D game, are required here; among the choices are Chemistry, Photographry, and Criminology.

Masque also introduces RAVENLOFT setting players to gunpowder. Simple, common sense rules ease the transition from crossbows to carbines. Armor, for instance, provides no protection against firearms used at short range, and only modest protection at medium and long ranges. Characters attempting to empty their guns may take advantage of a two-part combat round, making half their attacks in part one, the rest in part two. To reflect the increased damage from bullets, any damage die showing a 6 is rerolled. A hit from a derringer, for example, normally inflicts 2d6 points of damage. If the dice show a 5 and a 6, the 6 is rolled again. If the subsequent roll is 4, the hit inflicts a total of 15 points (5 + 6 + 4).

Reduced reliance on magic further nudges Masque in the direction of realism. Spells can't be used unless the caster makes a successful proficiency check. Magical items are rare, and in some cases, unavailable. Even acquiring a spell is risky; if a character attempting to learn a new spell fails a System Shock roll, he loses one point of Strength or Constitution.

The rule book ends with an informative chapter of referee tips, covering rule modifications from the RAVENLOFT boxed set. Three fully-developed adventures, each in its own 32-page booklet, answer most of the questions about staging campaigns. Red Tide serves up few surprises—anyone who can't anticipate the plot twists hasn't seen enough of those—but plenty of action and a lot of fun. Red Jack, a Jack the Ripper take-off, put my entire party in the cemetery—consider that a recommendation. Red Death uses Edgar Allen Poe as a springboard for a tricky mystery.

Graphically, the RAVENLOFT campaign remains the most conservative horror RPG on the market; compared to the in-your-face White Wolf line, the RAVENLOFT setting is about as visually compelling as the Cryptkeeper cartoon series. I realize that the RAVENLOFT campaign aims at a broader audience than, say, the VAMPIRE game, but TSR could stand to turn the temperature up a notch. The illustration on page 18 of the Masque rule book (where a gun blast ventilates a zombie’s head) is a step in the right direction, at least as far as we lowbrows are concerned. Though the referee screen does a nice job of displaying the tables, the posters don’t amount to much. One feature that I find a more or less standard map of the world, intended, I guess, for those who don’t have access to an atlas. The other depicts the cover art and the RAVENLOFT logo, intended, I guess, for those inclined to help TSR promote their products.

Evaluation: The Victorian setting’s fine, but it’s a sidebar to the system overhaul. Masque of the Red Death makes a persuasive case for reality-based role-playing, where wits count more than muscle and a shotgun packs more punch than a fireball. Endearingly human, these are the only AD&D game characters I’d consider using as investigators in a CALL OF CTHULHU game or, for that matter, as adversaries in a VAMPIRE campaign. And nitpickers who’ve been clamoring for a streamlined, skill-based AD&D game ought to be dancing in the streets. Masque of the Red Death doesn’t qualify as the Third Edition of the AD&D game, but it’s a reasonable facsimile—call it Second Edition, Version 2.0. May Conrons’ next mutant be just as orneriness.

EARTHDAWN* game supplement

One 152-page book, 24 pages of player handouts, one 22” X 32” map sheet, 18 treasure and creature cards, boxed

FASA Corporation

Additional design: Shane Lacy Hensley and John J. Terra

Editing: Donna Ippolito

Illustrations: Jim Nelson, Joel Biske, Steve Bryant, Elizabeth Danforth, Newton Ewell Earl Geier, Alex Heller, Jeff Laubenstein, Larry MacDougal, and Mike Nielsen

Cover: Les Edwards and Jim Nelson

Let’s settle this now: the EARTHDAWN game has displaced the RUNEQUEST* game as the pre-eminent alternative to the AD&D game. Though other fantasy RPGs continue to thrive—Chaosium’s superb PENDRAGON* game and Wizards of the Coast’s ARS MAGICA* game spring to mind—only the EARTHDAWN game matches the AD&D rules in scope and invention. Whether the EARTHDAWN game matches the AD&D game’s durability remains to be seen, but it’s still early. (If you’re keeping score, the RUNEQUEST game had about a twenty-year run.)

Initially, I was underwhelmed (see the review in DRAGON issue #202). Despite its ambitious reach, the EARTHDAWN rules seemed more interested in echoing the AD&D game rather than subverting it; the knickknacks (obsidimen, thread magic) felt gimmicky, the game systems more throw-back than revolutionary (12-sided dice?). But lately, I’ve been warming up to it, mainly because of classy supplements like Barsaive and Mists of Betrayal: Parlainth, a look at a devastated Theran city and the most entertaining EARTHDAWN package so far, continues to up the ante.

As with the previous supplements, Parlainth receives a first-class presentation. The attractive guide book boasts tasteful graphics and vigorous writing, leavened with subtle humor. ("Vardegul is a hard t’skrang to get to know.") To help referees shape the world to the needs of their campaign, the personality and location descriptions come with a menu of options. For instance, should a referee choose to introduce shady businessman Torgak into an adventure, he can make him distrustful of Therans in general (Option 1), resentful of the dwarf kingdom Throal (Option 2), or cooperative with independent adventurers (Option 3). The Eastern Catacombs of the Laneways may hold the jewels of a rich merchant (Option 1), contain a gauntlet of traps to discourage trespassers (Option 2), or consist of useless passages built by cadaver men (Option 3). Eccentric organization, however, makes the book tough to use. The “Running Adventures in Parlainth” section inexcipically precedes the discussion of Parlainth itself. Halfway through the book, the page numbers stop (at 77), then start over (with page 2); if the designers felt a need to divide the text, why not just give us two books? Though the colorful monster cards are well-done, the poster map is a waste, indifferently rendered and information-free. On the other hand, the player handouts, a generous assortment of parchment-like documents, are an inspired bonus. Allegedly from the junk shop of Vardeghul (the hard-to-know t’skrang), the sketch maps and journal excerpts make terrific rewards, treasures, and clues.

The guide book opens with a history of the doomed city, explaining how Parlainth began as the provincial capital of Theran, then moved into an astral plane for protection against the Scourge. But alas, evil nomed its way in, corrupting the city almost beyond recognition. Now, Parlainth has returned to the land of Barsaive in a form recognizable to anyone who’s spent more than a day or two with a fantasy RPG: “...shattered buildings, winding and rubble-strewn streets, and dark, dank catacombs...many of them filled with fiendish traps, wherein glittering treasures and dangerous creatures reside.”

Once past the history, which is more interesting than I’ve made it sound, the rest of book details nine sections of ruins, including the War Zone, the Vaults, and four different catacombs. Each section opens with a background briefing, followed by architectural descriptions, notes on inhabitants and traps, and encounter suggestions. For example, pyramids and muck-filled pools dominate the Vaults, a former administrative center that’s become a sanctuary for renegades. A party may search for murderous fugitives or seek an audience with the dragon Charcoalgrin. Snares and alarm bells line one of the corridors, another holds extravagant tapestries and hot-tempered ogres.

Old hat? It could’ve been. But designer Robin Laws has a knack for transforming the mundane into magic. Adventurers low on funds may place bets on the falsemen, humanoid servitors engaged in perpetual duels. A lucky explorer might stumble across a butterspian, an enchanted lump of lard (I’m not kidding) with magical healing abilities. Waxmen, animated wicker mannequins, lurk in the shadows, as do the Scurries, repulsive scavengers whose brains protrude from cracks in their skulls. The absence of floor plans and detailed scenarios may frustrate beginners, but seasoned players, especially those nostalgic for the campaigns of their youth, should find a lot to like.

Evaluation: A dungeon crawl for grad schoolers, Parlainth refreshes even the hoariest cliches with its muscular design and literate encounters. There’s a mountain of material here; an industrious referee should be able to develop a year’s worth of adventures without breaking a sweat. It suffers, however, from an inconsistent tone, not moody enough for horror, nor goofy enough for light fantasy. FASA has yet to convince me to undertake a full-scale EARTHDAWN campaign, but they’re getting closer. For now, I plan to mine Parlainth for ideas and use them elsewhere—you could say that Parlainth is one of the best AD&D game products TSR never published.

first to feature dust and rocks. The dust, vermil, grants extraordinary powers to anyone who brews it up and drinks it, but may cause excruciating physical deformities. The rocks, cinnabryl, can be formed into jewelry that fends off the area effects of vermil, and shaped into weapons capable of wounding magical creatures. Both substances permeate the region’s brutal past. Intriguing locales and even the residents’ skin a dull red. A string of self-contained city-states populate the area. Most characters get a single Legacy, though some, such as those taking the Inheritor character kit, may acquire several. Legacies resemble standard AD&D game spells, such as charm and fly usable at will, three times per day. But they have their drawbacks. As soon as a character gains a Legacy, he begins to lose up to 2d4 points from an ability score (chosen by the DM). He also begins to turn red and, worse, develop a physical deformity related to his Legacy; the armor Legacy, for example, might transform the affected character’s skin to snake scales. These deformities may be avoided by wearing a cinnabryl amulet. Cinnabryl, however, goes dead at the rate of one ounce per week, ensuring a constant scramble for pristine ore.

Evaluation: Engrossing and nervy, Red Steel takes the AD&D game in a lot of unexpected directions, and I’m not just talking about fighters being able to blast magic missiles. The economics are different; consider the trade ramifications where cinnabryl is more precious than gold. The balance of power is different; how, for instance, does a ruler keep the peace in a community of self-absorbed spell-casters? Even the animals are different; it’s possible to run into a werewolf with red fur or a spike-covered goblin. On the downside, Red Steel’s emphasis on rules doesn’t leave much room for the civilization I wanted to know more about cinnabryl black marketers, vermil cultists, torture armament merchants. Put it this way: if TSR offered to swap the CD for a Savage Coast source book, I’d Federal Express mine to them this afternoon. As it stands, Red Steel is a tantalizing introduction to an exciting world, one I hope TSR revisits soon.

SHADOWRUN® game supplement
One 168-page book, one 64-page book, one 22" X 34" map sheet, one 17" X 11" map sheet, two laminated travel passes, boxed

FASA Corporation
Design: Nigel D. Findley
Additional design: Bill Lenox, Tom Wong, and Tom Dowd Development: Tom Dowd
Editing: Donna Ippolito
Illustrations: Joe Bisco, Steve Bryant, Paul Daly, Earl Geier, Rick Harris, Jeff Laubenstein, Dan Smith, and Karl Waller Cover: Dave McCoy and Jim Nelson

Denver, the most elaborate SHADOWRUN game supplement to date, examines the politically divided Treaty City in all its decadent glory. As he did in the Lone Star and Corporate Shadowfiles source books, designer Nigel Findley provides a running commentary in the form of computer chat from a gaggle of argumentative wise guys.

Bert: “And I hate it. It’s intrusive and annoying, a bunch of mindless babble fudged with sophoric slang like ‘chummer’ and ‘frag you’.”

The player’s book, the bigger of the two, contains information generally available to local residents. The GM’s book discusses the region’s history, key personalities, and secret organizations, and includes about 20 pages of new rules. The poster map shows a birds-eye-view of the city; a small color map details the various sectors.

Bert: “Okay, so it looks pretty. But as a ref’s resource, Denver makes a good door stop. If you want to find a piece of hard data, you’ve got to sift through all that miserable ‘chummer’ babble.”

Findley employs a self-assured, conversational writing style, taking care to give each participant in the commentary a unique voice.

Bert: “Yeah, well, he should’ve employed some self-restraint while he was at it. Maybe that would’ve helped him avoid sentences like ‘More so than even in Berlin, these not-always-peaceful opportuni- ties abound because the unique nature of the divided city allows no room for direct confrontation or open warfare.’”

Ernie: “This is a role-playing supplement, not a journalism textbook. How about all the neat places, like the Tender Fender Mender, an auto chop shop where you can get a missile rack installed on your T-bird?”

Also known as the Front Range Free Zone, Denver consists of six political sectors, each with its own laws and culture. Black market trade dominates the economies, making Denver a hotbed of corruption and ambiguous morality—in short, it’s a typical SHADOWRUN city.

Bert: “Typical? I’d say ‘generic.’ You could rip random pages out of these books, stick ‘em in other cyberpunk supplements, and never know the difference.”

Ernie: “Like you couldn’t say the same thing about most fantasy supplements. Besides, anyone who reads everything in the box will find plenty of cool stuff. How about the cops in Azzietown who use paranormal critters to sniff out drug smugglers? Or the Yakuzza clan that controls the illegal chip market by training their own deckers to outmaneuver the Mafia?”

There are adventure hooks galore for those willing to dig them out, but no developed scenarios.

Ernie: “Who cares?”

Evaluation: Despite its ambition, Denver is basically a water-treader, a look at a familiar setting from a different angle. And the quirky style sabotages its utility; it’s a good read, but it’s not much of a reference. Still, the SHADOWRUN game has no devotee more capable than Nigel Findley, who energizes even the dreariest all intelligent creatures, PCs included, gain magical abilities called Legacies when they enter the area. Most characters get a single Legacy, though some, such as those taking the Inheritor character kit, may acquire several. Legacies resemble standard AD&D game spells, such as charm and fly usable at will, three times per day. But they have their drawbacks. As soon as a character gains a Legacy, he begins to lose up to 2d4 points from an ability score (chosen by the DM). material with wit and enthusiasm; if Findley were a chicken, he’d probably lay cybernetic eggs. Experienced players should find Denver irresistible—providing, of course, they’re willing to navigate all the silly lingo.

Short and sweet

A perfect companion to the Parlainth boxed set and an excellent introduction to the EARTHDAWN game, this collection of simple scenarios takes a party of newcomers on a memorable tour of enchanted laboratories, creature-ridden catacombs, and similar AD&D game-ish locales. The designers, veterans all, offer lucid advice on setting the stage and troubleshooting unexpected situations. Despite a few humorous moments—adversaries called bog gobs, Allen Varney’s tongue-in-cheek “Passion Box”—this isn’t what you’d call light fantasy. The mind-wrenching abomination of “Threads” would be right at home in a CALL OF CHILULHU game. In “Blood Pact,” there’s a creep who can’t speak because of all the gore bubbling from his multiple mouths. Bring your first-aid kit. (Note to the financially strapped: the Parlainth box, while helpful, is optional.)

Karameikos: Kingdom of Adventure, by Jeff Grubb, Aaron Allston, and Thomas M. Reid. TSR, Inc., $30.

You’re a newcomer to the AD&D game. You’ve played the FIRST QUEST™ game. You’ve read the Player’s Handbook and understand about half of it. Now what? Well, you can 1) close your eyes, buy one of the zillion or so supplements, and hope for the best; 2) design your own adventures from scratch (good luck!); or 3) invest in the exquisite Karameikos campaign set. The 126-page Explorer’s Guide, with lavish color illustrations throughout, covers all the basics in plain language. It explains the purpose of a campaign setting (“...a location in which a DM can place an AD&D game against a larger context”), how to use the maps (“Don’t let the hexes throw you”), and a step-by-step procedure for creating PCs (“Create a blank sheet of paper... list the abilities down the left side...”). A 56-track compact disc (total time: 59:59) enlivens the Adventure Book scenarios with dialogue and sound effects. For instance, the DM plays Track #5 when the PCs attempt to smash their way into an abandoned building; a stalwart warrior yells, “Lend your shoulders and we’ll break down the door! One! Two! Three!” followed by the sound of shattering wood (or is that crumbling bone?). If you’re a beginner and Karameikos fails to make your heart race, you might as well go back to crossword puzzles.

The Star Wars Planet Collection, by Grant S. Boucher, Julie Boucher, Bill Smith, and John Terra. West End Games, $25.

This hefty volume compiles the three volumes of the Planets of the Galaxy series, updating them for West Ends Second Edition STAR WARS™ game. The format remains the same: each of the more than two dozen settings begins with a summary of critical statistics (population, climate, tech levels), followed by a list of cultural highlights, key personalities, and oddball monsters (Orgons are sentient plants that communicate with sign language; the Gazzaran resemble flying squirrels that operate steam engines). Hard science is about as pertinent here as it is in the AD&D game, but nobody plays the STAR WARS RPG for the physics lessons. As long as the West End-ers were fiddling with the original books, too bad they didn’t improve the maps. Still, a good buy for new recruits.

Mekton Mecha Manual Volume One, by Benjamin Wright, Michael MacDonald, David Ackerman, and Derek Quintanar. Talsorian Games, $8.

In the battle of the giant robots, I give the edge to Palladium’s ROBOTECH™ game over R. Talsorian’s MEKTON® game. Not only are the Palladium machines more formidable, the rich background makes the ROBOTECH setting a better bet for a long campaign, But for those who want to skip the preliminaries and get on with the destruction, the Mekton game is an acceptable—and less demanding—alternative. The Mecha Manual provides complete stats for 24 high-tech nightmares, among them the VAH-A64 Switch Blade, the Air Gunner Fantan G8L, and the Merge-Griffin Godgriffin VX. The graphics are evocative, the historical summaries mercifully brief. Just one question: if the Mecha Manual uses rules from the forthcoming Mekton Zeta system, how come we got the Mecha Manual first?

Dungeon Masters who’ve enjoyed the previous volumes in the Lankhmar series (including Tales of... and Slayers of...) but still don’t know how to get a campaign off the ground should appreciate the focused approach of the latest entry. A block of adventure hook follows each guild, NPC, and location description, making it a snap for DMs to develop encounters geared to the interests of their players. The last chapter offers insightful tips for handling hard-to-please players. The result: sophisticated, intelligent role-playing for those more interested in negotiating treaties than scalping orcs.

The Unnaturals, by Sandy Addison, Dustin Browder, Bill Olmedahl, and Ed Stark. West End Games, $15.

A source book with a sense of humor, this menagerie of creatures for the BLOODSHADOWS™ game augments the expected assortment of ghosts and demons with water imps that live in the kitchen sink and face-shifters who read Better Homes and Glowstones magazine. That’s not to say they’re docile: water imps are prone to drown their landlords in the bathtub. Well-written and deftly illustrated—but where’s the index?

In 1987, the small but spirited Kingslayer Publications put out the MANHUNTER® game, a science-fiction RPG sporting hairy-chested heroes and the meanest war machines this side of the Terminator films. Now, the MANHUNTER game has arisen as a supplement for Palladium’s RIFTS® game, and everybody wins. MANHUNTER is no longer burdened with the formula-heavy rules that made it a chore to play. And the RIFTS Megaverse, top-heavy with sinister worlds like Wormwood and the Vampire Kingdoms, benefits from MANHUNTER’s breezy space opera. The alien races are especially strong: the non-descript Aglions identify each other by the style of dress, the Qulaki produce septic blood that poisons their enemies. The copious technology section gives details on needle lasers, jolt maces, and pulse blast- ers. As for the Manhunters, they’re super-powered robots with the dispositions of serial killers. The designers warn that “if the Manhunters ever meet and join forces with the Mechanoids (from the RIFTS supplement of the same name), the Megaverse could be in serious trouble.” Sounds good to me! It was midday, and most of Frostgard’s villagers were off the streets for lunch. Dword paused to chat with the familiar faces he did find, renewing acquaintances as he worked his way through the picturesque stone village until reached the smoke shop.

“D-Ray’s dropped drawers!” exclaimed Harald Gap-tooth from behind a barrel of tobacco shrouded in gray pipe fog. The robust elder craftsman rose up through the smoke, yanked the briar from his mouth, and ashtrayed it, grinning from bearded ear to bearded ear. “Hulloh, Dword Ecklundson. Still carving are you, lad?”

“Yes, but not nearly as well as the man who taught me how.”

“Modesty indeed!” laughed Harald, flashing a smile that exposed his name trait. “I saw that last one you made—a fine effort, that. Keep at it and one day you’ll be as good as I am.”

Dword smiled. Harald had faithfully taught him all there was to know about pipes: How to pick out briar; how to size up the ebauchon—the rough block of cut burl; how to follow the wood grain; how to balance the weight so it hung just right—

“Balderdash’s bulge!” Dword ejected as he gaped at the huge ruddy knar Harald held. “Is that a glyphwood burl? I’ve never seen one like it! Where did you get it?”

Harald showed the red burl proudly. “Aye, they’re as scarce as roc’s teeth. Got two of the burls from a trader from Jobos. He had no idea what they were worth. Har-har!”

“You have two burls like that?”

“Aye,” Harald beamed. “This be the first. I’m doing it for sale, yeppa.” He lifted a second burl from behind the counter. “The sister burl I started just enough to see the run of the grain—straight and true. It’s a treasure, my final masterpiece. I’m keeping this one for myself, I am! But I’m putting the first up for auction at the Ytnwald Faire. I’m only working on it when I’m feeling prime—wouldn’t want to ruin it.”

Dword calculated frantically; the faire was about three fortnights off. “Perfect! I’m just passing through now, but I could buy it on the way back from the Gokland—”

Oops! He clamped his jaw shut.

“The Gokland!” Harald cried. Now Norlanders did not normally pry into each other’s business—among a belligerent brood, it readily led to trouble—but Dword’s slip of the tongue was so incredible that Harald could not restrain himself. “Another adventure, eh? Well, it’s none o’ mine—but the Gokland! Why, lad?”

“There’s something I need out there. But don’t worry, Harald. Woden’s wetted whatnots! Nothing will keep me from coming back for that glyphwood pipe?”

Harald recoiled, but not from the thought of the perils of the Gokland. “Lad, friend though you be,” he said, plainly pained, “and I to your father before you, bless him—he was the fight’n’est prowman Olaf Fyddish ever had. I’ll never forget how your father jumped off the Hardanslaw on the Gormus raid, his screamsax flashing and his lungs roaring. Scared the Mousy guards to death. But know you, Dword, that this briar must sell dear. You know as well as any man what its true worth is, and I need every silver piece for my retirement.”

“Harald! You can’t retire! I’ll never buy a pipe from any other man as long as I live.”

Harald smiled ruefully. “It pleases me to hear you say that, yeppa, but facts are facts. It’s getting harder each day to work. My eyes aren’t so good anymore, and I’ve got a touch of shakers now. And the truth is I want to travel a bit now. To see Kor and even Gormus again—what a time we had on that last raid. The ‘Claw was so heavy with booty we could barely row it. Did your father ever tell you about the ladies from the circus we abducted on our senior trip? What a time it was!”

“Yeppa, but facts are facts. It’s getting harder each day to work. My eyes aren’t so good anymore, and I’ve got a touch of shakers now. And the truth is I want to travel a bit now. To see Kor and even Gormus again—what a time we had on that last raid. The ‘Claw was so heavy with booty we could barely row it. Did your father ever tell you about the ladies from the circus we abducted on our senior trip? What a time it was!”

“Hi! I’ll pay you well for that pipe, Harald.”

“Dword,” the artisan said sympathetically, “Sigtrygg Silkbeard’s cast his eye on it, practically believes he’s commissioned it from me. Not true, of course, but he believes it. And to make sure no one dares to bid against him at the faire, he’s already posted his opener. It’s a big number, lad.”

Dword wilted fearfully. Sigtrygg! he thought. The wealthiest robber baron in the whole accursed Eastern Confederation of manure-burrowing, slime-swilling, toadyling fjordlords. The same sellout cowards that caught my father after the raid on Gormus and turned him over to those cradle-to-grave-robbing Gormousian bankers led by the insidious S. Crow.

“How much, Harald? How much?”

Dword held his breath.

Dword almost fainted. Four knuckles of silver snake made a finger; five fingers made a hand; six hands to an arm—argh! Twelve hundred knuckles of silver! And that’s just the opening bid.

Harald looked at Dword; then his mood swung, fueled by old unsettled grievances. “I tell you what, lad. I never liked Sigtrygg—nobody here much does. Not after what he did to the ‘Claw after the raid, the bootlicking blackguard. Sank it deeper than whale puckey, yeppa! Woden knows, he doesn’t even smoke a pipe. He just wants it to show off how rich he is. But if you match his bid, lad, I’ll sell it to you outright, I will, and Sigtrygg Silkbeard be damned!”

“Fair enough, Harald,” Dword said, but wondered fretfully if the Wodenslaw would permit Harald to evade an auction now that a bid was posted. Sigtrygg will take suit, no doubt, Dword thought. But that’s the least of my worries. Ten arms of silver! Lodis’ lewd largess! I haven’t got half that to my whole worldly worth.

“I best be going now, Harald,” the disheartened red-beard sighed. “I need a couple of twists.” After a fast haggle, a pair of double-helices crossed the barrethead, a duo of twisted fireweed. Dword gathered them up and walked to the door.

“Don’t put that pipe up for auction without me, Harald.”

Suddenly, the shopkeep called back at him, “Wait, Dword! I best tell you quick. Bjorn Hornklofi’s back in these parts again. He’s working for Sigtrygg now, and he’s been running your name down around town. Watch out for him, lad! He’s as mean as ever.”

Dword halted agape. Bjorn Hornklofi? Now what could he be mad about? Or rather what new thing could—

But the nights, ah, well . . .

Dword blushed. That last evening at the Hungry Hogshed, Astrid Deepwell had been there—well, hey, if she’s Bjorn’s betrothed, she certainly didn’t act like it that night.

“Thanks for the warning, Harald.”

Waving, he left. But out on the street again, he frowned.

Bjorn Hornklofi! Trouble with a killer B! Ever since childhood we’ve butted heads over one thing or another, each trying to outdo the other in some way. But I’ve got more important things to fret about now—like the Gokland, and trollkiens, Lady Katherine’s sorcery, and—Woden’s raunchy remunerations!—how am I going to pay for that pipe?

* * * * *

At this point in the book, Dword goes off to have an adventure with the previously mentioned trollkiens, a race of tiny beings who live in the mountains of Norlandia. When he returns to Frostgard, he hurries to visit Harald at the smoke shop. We pick up our tale as Dword has just come in the door.

* * * * *

Dword agogged. “Woden’s wonders! It’s a masterpiece, Harald! Positively the most exquisite pipe in the world. I can die happy now knowing that just once in my life I’ve seen perfection.”

Great display of restraint! Dword’s inner tightwad chided. That’s really going to drive the price down.

Shut up! he ordered the bartering demon in his blood. This is not beads, this is fine art. This is something money may buy but can never own. It has a spirit beyond anyone’s ability to possess. It belongs forever to its creator, just as the painting belongs to the painter, the song to the bard—and to those who can appreciate the creator’s craft.

“I just finished it,” Harald said with a tired, haggard look in his eyes. “If it smokes as sweet as it looks, you’ll never need wine, women, or song again.”

Giddy, they both laughed.

Then the elder craftsman’s mood turned dark. He sagged and wiped his hands on his apron. “I tell you truly, lad, it was a trial, the toughest challenge of my life: a hard burl, requiring long hours and precise small strokes. It’s been a drain on me. Every minute I’ve lived with the fear that one slip of the knife would ruin it. I feel ten years older now.”

Dword saw the truth of it. Harald was indeed much grayer and thinner than when he last saw him a few fortnights ago. Can a man age that quickly? Yes, I see that he can . . .

“I’m spent, Dword,” Harald said with melancholy.
“I’m not up to the work of the sister burl anymore. My eyesight’s weak; my hands are no longer steady. I’d die if I ruined it, yeppa. I’ll never know its joy now. It just came along too late for me. And this one,” he said as he held up the finished pipe, “well, Sigtrygg’s sending Bjorn to look at it today.”

“I’ve only got two arms of silver, Harald.”

“Sigtrygg’s offered ten, Dword. You know I can’t—”

“But that won’t be until Ytnwald Faire,” Dword argued, his bartering blood loose before he realized it. “When Sigtrygg’s boats come in—many days from now—who knows what their profits will be? What if his trading’s been bad? What then?”

Halfway between outrage and empathy, Harald considered Dword suspiciously. The redbeard’s clothes were dirty and rumpled, his hair ratted, his face gaunt and weathered. I’ll bet he didn’t even stop at home before he came here.

“I’m losing the pipe, too!” the craftsman bleated. “It’s my life’s crowning achievement, and it could buy all the other pipes in my shop—but not this one. I’m sorry, Dword. Much as I loved your father—he saved my life on the Gormus raid, you know—the price is still ten arms and not one knuckle less! But there’s time yet for you to round up more silver before the faire.”

Dword regrouped, ashamed. “I’m sorry I offended you, Harald. I did not really mean to offer you a paltry mighty sum you’ve offered me, lad, and it could buy all my life’s crowning achievement, and it’ll go to that verweathered. I’ll bet he didn’t even stop at home before he “I’m losing the pipe, too!” the craftsman bleated. “It’s my life’s crowning achievement, and it’ll go to that verminous Sigtrygg Silkeard—that’s the worst. But I cannot go below his posted bid. That’s Wodenslaw. Now, it’s a mighty sum you’ve offered me, lad, and it could buy all the other pipes in my shop—but not this one. I’m sorry, Dword. Much as I loved your father—he saved my life on the Gormus raid, you know—the price is still ten arms and not one knuckle less! Dword regrouped, ashamed. “I’m sorry I offended you, Harald. I did not really mean to offer you a paltry two arms of silver for the pipe—I just got caught up in the saying of it and it came out all wrong. What I meant to say was that I haven’t got the silver—but silver is not what I came to offer you.”

Harald stared. “What’s that thing? Looks like a crown. Who’s head is small enough to—” The pipe carver gasped. “Yes, Harald, it’s the crown of the trollkien king! I make it three hands of pure gold by weight, plus the gems—and for all I know it might be ensorcelled. You could offer this for sale at the faire instead of the pipe and be far better off. But I’ll sweeten the deal by throwing something else in, too.”

Rapidly the shopkeeper computed—gold being worth twenty times silver—and his greed lights came on. “What else? That new ring you’re sporting?”

Dword blushed and looked at the aquamarine ring on his pinkie. “No, Harald. Something even more valuable: oil.”

Dword pulled a canteen from his pack. “It’s not that kind of oil, Harald,” he said. “This oil’s magic balm from the Spruce Spring—the same as Sigurd used on the Helm.”

“More power to you if that be true, Dword, but I’m no spring sea dog anymore. My roving days are long over. It’s more than a dozen years since I went off to Gormus with your dad—”

“Rub a few drops of this on your tools, Harald.”

The pipemaster’s eyes lit up.

“This will make your hands young again, Harald. You’re already the best pipemaster in Norlandia—but with magic tools, you’ll be the best on Leiblein, better even than the dwarves of Kibquez. You’ll be a legend, with an edda of your own. I’m throwing the balm in as a bonus,” Dword said happily, pleased that he could be helpful to his old mentor, “even though the crown itself is trade more than enough. Now you can finish the other burl. Can Sigtrygg Silkeard offer you that?”

Harald hesitated only for a split second. “If it works, it’s a deal,” he said enthusiastically. Reaching below the counter, the pipesmith found a carving knife, which he handed to the barbarian freebooter. Dword dribbled just three drops of balm on the knife, guessing that to be sufficient, then carefully rubbed it into the tool.

As the oil permeated the blade, a purple verdigris formed. “Try it.”

Excited, Harald fetched an ordinary ebauchon. Like a surgeon considering a life-or-death incision, he poised the blade over the burl with great concentration, then sliced. Flick! Harald drew the tool back in astonishment. “It responds to my thoughts, as if it were an extension of my mind! Thorogod’s thunderbuns! I can carve that other burl now with my eyes closed.”

“Do we have a deal?” Dword gulped.

“Done and done!”

Solemnly, Dword lifted the glyphwood pipe off the counter and lovingly appraised its superb grain, flawlessly straight. The pipe fit his grip like a velvet glove. He and the pipe were two pieces of the same puzzle. Unable to restrain his joy, Dword fumbled for some tobacco, hurriedly stuffing the bowl.

Seconds later, rich smoke emanated from the sculpture. “Well?” Harald asked.

“It’s heaven.” Dword was deliriously happy. The sweet smoke wafted redolent with each breath. He relished each first puff.

Bjorn’s eye. “Look at this treasure, bootlick. By Wodenslaw, when items are offered in barter that have never been sold before—and thus have no previously established trade value—the auctioneer may—according to his own reckoning of the proffered item’s worth and at his own risk—assess such worth.”

Harald leered defiantly. “Know, Bjorn Hornkløfi, that I hereby declare the fabled crown of the trollkiens to be worth one thousand arms of silver! Go, quisling, and tell your coldhearted boss he’s been outbid. Tell him also that hereby declare the fabled crown of the trollkiens to be sold before—and thus have no previously established denslaw, when items are offered in barter that have never been sold before. Bjorn’s eye. “Look at this treasure, bootlick. Bjorn looked at the crown and staggered with defeat. In an instant, he knew that Harald was entirely within his rights. Though the stated thousand arms of silver was absurd—Sigtrygg’s entire fleet wasn’t worth much more than that—the crown was indeed worth far more than the ten arms of silver he was authorized to pay.

Sigtrygg’s going to wring my—”Dword Ecklundson!” Bjorn reeled in shock as the smoke cleared enough for him to see just who it was that had cackled Sigtrygg’s treasure-to-be. “How,” he sputtered, “how dare you show your face in Frostgard again, you carp-breathed blowhard!”

“I live here, fish dip!” Dword grinned. He turn to face his boyhood rival and tried not to gloat much, although at that point, abject humility was a bit hard to come by. “The pipe’s mine now, Bjorn, fairly bought.”

Bjorn seethed. He inflated his musculature, priming himself for whatever. Though no taller than Dword, Bjorn was wider, outweighing him by two stone, all of it bone and sinew. From the bottom of his immense feet to the thick neck atop his broad yoke, he was all muscle—and there were those who thought the remaining part was all muscle, too.

The pipe gone to his worst enemy! Double doom! “So, you’re back again,” Bjorn sneered. “Where are those two carrionfish you puppy-dog along behind, eh? Imagine—a Norlander friendly with Brets. Your father weeps in his watery grave.”

“It seems to me my consorting with Bretilyans is not what galls you most,” Dword snorted. The reference to his father infuriated him, piercing his pipe dreams, and he slipped into familiar patterns of behavior where Bjorn was involved. “And leave my father out of this. He would never have kowtowed to Sigtrygg Silkbeard—not to the man who burned and sank the Hardansclaw!”

“Lads, stop!” Harald Gaptooth cried in alarm. “Stop it now. You’ve about used up all the duels. Don’t do this!”

That’s true, both thought. Duels were a way of life for Norlanders. But since civilization had begun to creep sinistrously over the island continent, the custom was fading, especially in the more populous Eastern Confederation. In the backwater fishing villages of the isolated western fjords, though, it was a long time between traveling judges, and duels were still fought to settle disputes. There were duels of every kind: tests of strength and speed, of wit and skill, of craft and craftiness; duels to resolve conflicts over land, women, insults, honor. But they were all intended to be nonfatal, else the boisterous Norlanders would have depopulated their country eons ago.

All the duels save one, that is. “He’s right, Bjorn,” Dword relented. I’ve got the pipe now, he told himself, and I really have no interest in either Astrid or Bergetta. “We’ve dueled before—don’t you think it’s about time we put an end to it?”

Dword must mean— Bjorn was weak in the knees, trembling. He had intended to challenge Dword to a log rolling contest—they hadn’t done that one before—but how could he back out now? Dword had challenged him in front of a witness. Trembling, face taut, the blond bully stoutly replied. “Yes, I see what you mean. It’s agreed then—an oath duel. Tomorrow? At noon? In the village square?”

Dword choked, nearly losing his magnificent new red pipe. No! That’s not what I meant. Not an oath duel. I meant we’re just getting too old for this childishness. But how can I back down now? He challenged me in front of a witness.

“Sure,” Dword dumbly mumbled.

Frieda’s final fling! An oath duel.

Noon came and the village square was packed. All of Frostgard was turned out, and many from the surrounding hamlets on the Hardanfjord had made the trip into the fishing village.

Ragnar Rocbeak, senior ombudsman on the fjord, presided; beside him was a clerk to scribe the oaths. Oath duels had strict rules. Wodenslaw demanded that the oaths be original. They had to be checked in, and posted to the seconds, who need not be present—and weren’t. Not that it mattered. So serious was an oath duel that the whole community would close ranks to enforce the dead man’s curse on the victor. Everyone had a vested interest in maintaining the sanctity of the death curse, else chaos would result and the fragile social structure of the aggressive Norlanders would break apart.

A man who willfully violated an oath forfeited all—his property, his name, even his life. He would be hounded to his death; not even a fjordlord could—or would—save him. The oathbreaker was a pariah, to be slain on sight.

The dead man’s curse. Without it, a duel to the death was little more than sanctioned murder of the weak by the strong. Even the meanest hothead thought twice, since there were so many other duels and challenges with which to humiliate an opponent without having to face the oath—saying that the duel’s victor might live to regret all the rest of his days.

If an oath could be made terrible enough, then an opponent might find it in his heart to settle the dispute without arms, for it was commonly considered that one’s honor was worse off by winning an oath duel than by resolving the differences. Strong warriors and battle-scarred veterans had been known to sink to their knees and plead forgiveness from their most hated enemy rather than face the prospect of an oath worse than death.

The dead man’s vow was embedded in the Norlandic tradition. Best known was the curse of one-eyed, lame Agrim Ulfair. So unspeakably repulsive was Agrim’s horrific oath—it would be unconscionable to reprint it here—that his opponent, the goliath Lars Olegson, had a heart attack while contemplating it and died while trying to speak—whether to voice his own oath or to renounce the duel will never be known.

The crucial rule was that an oath had to be original. No oath could be used twice; it belonged forever to the man or woman cursed with it.

Cold gray wisps obscured the noon sun on a blustery spring day. Ragnar, keeper of the oath tome, cloaked in a white robe, approached Bjorn Hornklofi with solemn deliberateness.

“Are you ready, Bjorn Hornklofi of Frostgard?”

Clad in thick plate armor, a ram’s horn insignia on his helm, Bjorn stood stiff, a heavy broadsword of formidable length posted before him. “Aye, Ragnar. I be ready.”

“And you Dword Ecklundson, also of Frostgard?”

“Aye.”

“People of the Hardan,” the ombudsman announced, “these two have come to do battle unto death, under the curse of the dead man, as is our ancient custom.” Ragnar pointed a bony finger at the armored warrior. “Bjorn, speak now the oath of your slayer.”

The crowd sucked in its breath in frozen terror and fascination. The scribe’s quill was poised over a fresh sheet.

Bjorn savored the moment, stretching out his powerful arms, waving his sword to demonstrate his prowess and to loosen up his immense frame. Well he knew that cunning and dramatics were as essential as a strong arm; histrionics had prejudiced more than one duel. If your opponent could be unnerved by a truly ghastly curse, then he might not be as swift or sure.

“Dword Ecklundson, defiler of my women,” Bjorn boomed, “I curse you now with this oath: ‘I, Dword Ecklundson, vow that should I slay Bjorn Hornklofi this day, then will I never again partake of the pleasures of the smoke. Never again will I feel the weight of a briar hanging from my mouth. Moreover, I will take the briar I treacherously connived away from Sigtrygg Silkbeard yesterday and fill it with week-old pig offal, and will then proceed to the deepest channel of the Hardan and forthwith dispose of my ill-gotten briar as befits the blackguard I am!’”

“Yargh!” Dword felt faint, dizzy. This was worse than all the dreadful things he had imagined Bjorn might say during the endless night, tossing and turning with the fear of this very moment. The finest pipe in the world—doomed! Dword’s legs trembled; his mind imploded. He turned to the elder and pleaded over the murmurs of the crowd, “Unfair, Ragnar! It’s a compound oath. He must give me a new one to say.”

Raising his palm to hold Dword’s protest in abeyance, Ragnar first performed his duty to ascertain whether or not the oath was in fact original. Hastily, he thumbed through the thick tome.

Oaths had to be specific and confined to general classes of vengeance. For example, a man couldn’t be made to do harm to himself or anyone else, or to give up his livelihood, or his wife and kin, but there were plenty of other psychological dooms one could inflict from beyond the pall. Knowing the particular idiosyncrasies of your enemy was essential to forming a truly sadistic revenge. And though it was often said that all the really good oaths had already been voiced, it was still amazing how ingeniously diabolical men facing death could be.

Ragnar shook his head, then pronounced officially, “People of the Hardan, know you that the oath be original.” Ragnar had been fairly certain that it would be.

Both Dword and Bjorn had had plenty of time to familiarize themselves with the oath tome—some people even went so far as to hire loathsome wordsmiths to assist them in formulating exceptionally vile oaths.

The ombudsman snapped the book shut. “As for your objection, Dword, the compound nature of the oath is quite acceptable. The second part is a specific case, a subset of the intent and not an extension of it. I cite Harik Half-Kor versus Gnarth Fowled-bowels, or the more widely-known Hans Magnusson versus Magnus Hansson as precedence.”

Ragnar paused, then added, gesturing to the scribe, “The ‘treacherously connived,’ ‘ill-gotten,’ and ‘blackguard’ bits can be left out. Now, Dword Ecklundson, will you accept this oath, or do you yield to Bjorn Hornklofi?”

Dword could yield now and be banished from the Haradanford, alive but dishonored, He could live on other fjords of Norlandia. This was perfectly acceptable under the Wodenslaw because it ended the feuding without losing a human resource, and was hardly considered a disgrace, especially if the yielder was not much of a warrior compared to the challenger.

Yield to that bully? Dword spasmed. Never! Involuntarily, his body locked and swayed. Every ounce of energy drained out from him. His face went sallow, his hands cold and clammy.

My pipe!

“So be it! Know then, people of the Hardan, that in death Bjorn Hornklofi’s curse is Dword Ecklundson’s oath in life. Now it be your turn, Dword. Speak your slayer’s oath.”

Dword’s mind had turned to oatmeal. My magnificent pipe—lost forever! Why go on living? But there’s something I should be doing now . . . what was it . . . my pipe!

“The oath!” prodded Ragnar.

The sight of Bjorn’s leer of triumph, his unsullied haughtiness, struck Dword’s heart, and the redbeard rallied his thoughts. Something Bergetta Bygones had told him in that solitary night of furtive bliss leaped into his memory, supplanting his original idea. It was something about—yes!

Looking crestfallen for dramatic impact, Dword created a new oath extemporaneously. “This curse I give Bjorn Hornklofi,” he said so low that the crowd had to strain to catch his words. “I, Bjorn Hornklofi, in the unlikely event that I slay Dword Ecklundson, do hereby vow never again to know the joy of clean, fresh linen. Never again shall I sleep on any sheet or blanket unless it be a fortnight used by another, and should I be a guest in any man’s house, I will use his already soiled towels in plain view of my host.”

Gasp!

The scribe dropped his quill in terror. Brave shield maidens fainted dead away. Bold sailors cringed in horror. Two-handed anti-hex gestures were formed hastily, and the assembled crowd slunk noticeably away from Bjorn Hornklofi, at least two steps farther than they would have if he’d had the fatally contagious Festering Plague.

Bjorn turned the color of sheets he would never again know should he survive the duel—although he was no longer sure he now cared to. He gurgled, and his eyeballs bulged. The tic on his left eye started up. “Foul!” he simpered to Ragnar. “See Hagar the Unclean versus the village of Tjelling.”

Ragnar himself was almost too stricken to turn the pages. Norlanders were notoriously fastidious. Ashen-faced, he fumbled through the book to Bjorn’s cited reference and checked, then looked up with the eyes of a man administering the last rites. “No, I’m sorry, Bjorn. That was underwear. Close, but not the same.”

Shaken, Ragnar forced himself to perform his duties properly and searched the extensive chapter on unsanitary practices.

He blanched. “The oath be original,” he pronounced, looking at Dword as if the redbeard were Old Red Bones himself. “Know, people of the Hardan, that—that”—Ragnar coughed, wiping cold sweat off his brow—“that Dword Ecklundson’s curse in death is Bjorn Hornklofi’s oath in life. Will you accept this oath, Bjorn Hornklofi, or do you yield to Dword Ecklundson?”

Bjorn huffed, reeling. His sword and armor weighed a ton; his legs and arms were disconnected from his mind. He doubted he would be able to move an inch when the time came.

Thoroughly unnerved, Ragnar gathered himself together to complete the duel ritual prior to the beginning of combat. He took a small hourglass, a three-minute timer, out of a wooden case.

“As is our custom, you have until the last grain falls to make peace with Woden—or with each other. I beg you two to renounce this senseless duel. Long years have you feuded—over what? Nothing, naught but ego. All manner of duels have you fought, but there can be only one oath duel. And yet this duel need go no further. Even the great fjordlords Ymir of Hjarstad and Fedorheim Four-fingers were able to break off an oath duel. With the curses given, there is no dishonor, and there are no consequences if both combatants now agree to stop.

Inverting the timer, Ragnar set it on the ground.

Sand flowed...

The two armed Norlanders stared at each other, minds in turmoil. For what seemed like an eternity, each quavered on the brink of trying to say something, meditating on the living hell that awaited should he survive the duel—not counting the inconsequential possibility of losing an arm or an eye in the process. But lifelong stubbornness does not die easily.

My pipe!
My sheets!

“Would...would...you...”

“. . . agree to-to-to...”

Two nods.

“Done!” cried out Ragnar hurriedly, intentionally knocking over the hourglass, for the last grains of sand may have been hanging in downward flight.

An Unfathomable Magic...
A Legendary King...
One Colossal Battle

Robert N. Charrette, the bestselling author of Never Deal with a Dragon and the Shadowrun™ series, returns with the second novel in his exciting new trilogy....

When museum guard John Reddy awoke King Arthur in A Prince Among Men, Earth's natural barriers against magic were depleted and an ancient evil inadvertently resurrected. Now, the legendary Arthur must join forces with Reddy in a war against this ancient power—a war that they must win before an even darker force is unleashed...and the entire world destroyed.

I am writing in response to Dale Donovan's editorial in issue #211. I think combining certain elements of one (or more) games into another is a great idea. In fact, I think it is a terrific way to expand your campaign. My only problem with the idea that I have is, isn't it possible for someone to create a character so powerful, either in strength, magic, or physical capability, that she has an unfair advantage against the others in the group? Situations may arise in which the character's power works against her. For example, if the character is strong, the rest of the group may just sit back and let the extremely strong character defeat their foe. Does a character like this want to accept this type of abuse? And, does the rest of the group really want to sit back and let some super-character fight all of their battles for them?

Don't get me wrong. I think this is a good idea, but DMs will have to establish some boundaries to avoid problems from cropping up.

In issue #213, Jason Whitbeck wrote about his concern over the high prices of miniatures and gaming products today. I would like to offer an explanation for the prices of miniatures and a solution for the prices of gaming products.

First, the reason that miniatures are rising in price is that the companies that produce them are moving away from using lead. A few years ago, when most miniatures were made of lead, gamers were subjecting themselves to a dangerous combination: that of playing or working with lead and downing snacks and beverages at the same time. I recall a letter in a past DRAGON® Magazine referring to the dangers of handling lead and not washing up before eating or drinking. Now the miniatures industry has shown true concern for its customers by replacing lead with more expensive but non-toxic materials. This does raise the price of miniatures, but it ensures the continued health and patronage of gamers.

As for the cost of gaming products, I don't know the reason for the rise in their prices, but I can offer a simple solution that also can help bring gaming groups together: share the cost of the products among your gaming friends. Either have each person in the group buy different products and bring them to gaming sessions or pool your group's money and select one person to be a kind of "librarian." Admittedly, neither of these ideas is a perfect solution (if there even is a "perfect" solution) and each involves a lot of trust among gaming groups, but I feel that either would be better options for those worried about the cost of purchasing gaming products on their own.

One more possible solution for affording either miniatures or gaming products is to receive them as gifts from friends and family. Birthdays and holidays are perfect opportunities to get the miniatures or products you want but can't afford.

This letter is in response to Stephen Jessup's plea for help in issue #212. While the column you suggested he read for help in converting FORGOTTEN REALMS® novels into playable adventures was well thought-out and written, I would like to add a few concrete suggestions for Mr. Jessup.

1. Don't expect the PCs in your campaign to do everything the heroes in the book did. They won't. Trying to force them into a preconceived series of actions will just cause frustration and bad feelings all around.

2. Don't introduce the heroes of the book as NPCs. You'll be tempted to have them "fix" the story when the PCs do their own thing, and this is a bad idea. The PCs should be the heroes (or at least the main characters) of every story (i.e., adventure) they're in.

If the PC party isn't well-rounded enough to face the proposed adventure, make up one or two original, appropriate, and not-too-powerful NPCs to tag along. Or, better yet, put off the adventure for a while until the party is ready for it. If it's really a good idea, it will keep.

3. Take a good look at the novel you want to convert. What is it you like about the story? What are the obstacles, settings, or villains that make it worth the effort of converting? Now, devise a plot that will hook your party and that incorporates those elements. Don't worry about the rest. It's just window dressing. If it flows naturally, use it in your adventure. If not, don't sweat it.

If your party doesn't go for the adventure (or any adventure, for that matter), then don't force the issue. If they haven't found out any of the secrets of the plot, you can rework it and use the core ideas later. If it can't be reused, then decide how not having the day saved affects your campaign world. Your players don't even have to know they could have stopped all hell from breaking loose.

If you can't think of how to proceed when the PCs stray from the expected course, level with them and say, "Guys, you completely threw me for a loop. I don't have anything planned that would fit here, so how about we call it a night and we'll pick up from here next time?" They won't bite. I promise.

I have noticed a dismaying trend in the adventures put out by TSR. It seems they are moving away from fully detailed adventures that can be played a number of ways to strict "storytelling" scripts that allow for no variations or originality on the part of players and DMs alike. The worst offender I have seen is the Marco Volo series by Anthony Pryor.

In this series, regardless of what the PCs want to do, they must:
—get thrown in the dungeons of Waterdeep;
—fight a mage and his band and let the mage escape;
—get in trouble with the law in Cormyr;
—get the tar beaten out of them by the main villain while being unable to strike a blow in return;
—use the information in a riddle for the NPC to defeat the villain;
—and watch while three deities resolve the PCs' adventure!

Why am I writing to DRAGON Magazine about this? Two reasons: 1) In issue #212, you have many articles actively endorsing this kind of scripted and dictatorial storytelling gayming style; and 2) If there is someone to write to at TSR about my concerns about the present lack of good adventures, I haven’t seen it published anywhere in my fourteen years of buying TSR products.

I don’t know who the designers making adventures now are, but TSR used to make adventures for people like my friends who crave the excitement of being heroes, not being mere spectators who are supposed to applaud the cleverness of the designer and his friends’ PCs, who are used as NPCs in Marco Volo, for example. Another thing bad about storytelling is that the designer feels free to skimp on everything from detailed maps to something as simple as giving the details of the NPC’s right. Once again, Marco Volo is a fine example of this. Volothamp, a 5th-level mage has five Ist-, four 2nd-, and four 3rd-level spells and a rapier, while a lich has far too few spells. The least these “storytellers” could do is get the details right!

I consider the AD&D® 2nd Edition game to be a marked improvement over the first. The reduction of the creature poisoning system (for some creatures at least) from a “save or die” to something a little less lethal was welcome. The giving of characters to also was gladly received. (It always bugged me that every god gave out the same spells.) The ability to individualize thieving skills also is a definite step in the right direction.

I think that the combat system works well for the most part. I have found, though, that converting all armor classes to numbers that start at 10 and increase, to be quite a time saver. All a person has to do is roll a 20-sided die, add all of their bonuses, and the resultant number is the armor class that they hit (the character’s THACO must be translated into the equivalent Attack Bonus, of course). I understand why this was not done, but I highly recommend changing over to those DMs out there who are still doing it the official way. One thing that does bother me about the combat system, though, is that people who are combat-trained, i.e., warriors, start out with exactly the same basic THACO that virtually untrained people, i.e., mages, do. This offends my common sense.

I do have two large nits to pick, however. The first of these is the undead draining system. Not only is it overly brutal to the players (unless you are in the habit of handing out a large amount of experience, or have many high-level clerics about to cast restoration spells), but it doesn’t make much sense, either. The hit points and the hit die I can see, but the creature’s touch you lose the memory of your combat or spell-casting skills? And you don’t even get a saving throw! As a player there is nothing that I hate more than this. So either a DM uses these creatures as written, and has many angry players, or avoids using them in favor of more balanced creatures. Either giving a saving throw or making the level drain temporary in effect (say lasting for a month or so) would be an improvement.

The second nit, and it’s a big one, is the magic system. Abandoning all use of the word “realistic,” I will choose instead the word “aesthetic.” To me, and to a large number of others, I’m sure, the mage forgetting his spells just isn’t aesthetic. I am pretty well read in the fantasy genre, and I have run across only one world where magic works that way. Thus, since the AD&D game tries to simulate fantasy, the AD&D magic system fails because it cannot simulate a majority of the literature that inspired it. This is something a spell-point or fatigue-based system can do.

I worked with the official system for as long as I could, but in the end I had to abandon it and create a point-based system. None of my players liked the old spell-casting system and I didn’t care for it, either. I do wonder if there are people out there who prefer the way that the spell system works now over a point- or fatigue-based system. Interestingly enough, I have noted that some of the official creatures (the example that comes to mind is the Phaerimm of the FORGOTTEN REALMS® setting) do not forget their spells when cast. A short word of warning to others who plan to make the change to a point-based system: There are certain spells that have to have checks (usually in the form of an increased spell-point cost) put on them or they will unbalance the game in a point-based system. Hold person, magic missile, and charm person, to name a few.

I would like to comment on the cleric problem mentioned in issue #210 of “Forum.” I’ve been in the FORGOTTEN REALMS® campaign scenario for over one year now, and I dare say that Mr. Bickford’s view of the cleric character really sounded very strange to me. The cleric being superior to all other classes—that might be a nice dream, but actually the reality is quite different. In my opinion, the cleric is nothing more than a background figure—needed by the rest of the party because of his healing, but in melee he is much weaker than the warrior. His spells are of a defensive nature; a mage may cast lightning bolt or fireball, while the cleric’s only offensive spell is the flame strike spell (a fifth-level spell).

Mr. Bickford mentioned several “superior” spells for clerics, such as the creeping doom spell (seventh level). A cleric only has access to this spell at 14th level (1,350,000 XP). A mage with the same amount of XP is 13th level and has access to the 6th level death spell and the disintegration spell. . . and still three more spell levels to gain!

The cleric probably is tougher than the rogue, but he lacks the special rogue abilities. A great disadvantage of the cleric class is the lack of a really good kit. Just compare the Chevalier and Gallant kits (from the Complete Bard’s Handbook and Complete Paladin’s Handbook), for example, with any available Priest kit!

Mr. Bickford believes that cleric spells are stronger than wizard spells—he can’t be serious about that! Everybody knows the cleric spell problem: Take a look at the casting times (from 4 to 8 up to one round or one turn). For example, compare the mage’s dimension door spell, casting time 1, with the cleric spell plane shift, casting time 8. Clerics in combat are too weak to cause real damage in melee and too slow with their spells.

One last point: Bickford said the mage may lose his spell book—okay, but the cleric may lose his spells as well—just anger the deity he worship!

Sometimes it’s really hard to play a cleric. The others kill the villains and all you can do is heal them when the battle is over. Nevertheless, I enjoy playing my cleric—I just get more fun by role-playing and not by dice-rolling.

I have been playing the AD&D game for about four years and have been a DM two years of those four. Some of my players have shared my fascination with the paladin. Not until recently have I run into a problem that has perplexed me for about two months now, and other DMs have no answer because of personal views about the rigid requirements of the paladin. I have read the Complete Paladin’s Handbook cover to cover and two articles in DRAGON Magazine and still no answers, so now it’s time to move to a higher source.

Paladins are the elite warriors that protect their sect with a fighter’s backbone and the healing powers of a priest, a force to be reckoned with, but the paladin class is too general. Does the paladin represent a generic “good” or “evil” force or does he have a specific god he follows like a priest? Do Paladins who follow a specific god lose certain abilities and gain the special powers granted by their gods the way priests do? There is not enough material, it seems, explaining the paladin to create a more versatile follower of a certain god.

I have used anti-paladins before as very strong enemies, but that gave rise to more questions. If a paladin is a holy warrior of his sect, all that is saying is that paladins are only lawful good (with the exception of the Egyptian god Horus) and anti-paladins are only chaotic evil. The question is, what if a good paladin wishes to follow a god who is chaotic good and the god requires that his priests are chaotic good in alignment? Would that bar the paladin from following that god (and vice versa for evil paladins)? Are there no paladins to protect that alignment of religion? I have tried to figure out how to work it out and have a good reason to give to my players, but nothing seems to work.

Also, why do paladins only follow the extreme alignments? What if a paladin wishes to be chaotic good? Should only followers of the Egyptian god Horus get that benefit? In my eyes a paladin should be a pename of his god, along with the priests and clerics and whatnot, so they should match the alignments of their gods. It would make no sense to me if a lawful good paladin followed a chaotic or neutral good god and contradicted his god’s alignment. One more thing—with the use of anti-paladins, wouldn’t the neutral gods have their own sect of neutral paladins to balance the odds?

Paladins are one of the hardest classes to play, but one of the most fascinating. Even if these questions cause arguments about the balance of alignments and a world of nothing but paladins roaming around, there is still one thing that remains. The paladins of any alignment would have strict laws to follow and would have to mirror their god’s alignment and their ways, or suffer the penalties—even that would discourage some people from playing the paladin class. Being a paladin can be quite boring to a player, because even the most cruel and powerful minions of evil squirm at the sight of a paladin. It would only be proper to give the paladin a good match to test his ability and his faith and for a neutral force to keep the “good” and “evil” paladins from destroying everything and everyone.

I am writing in response to several letters over the past few months that have gotten my attention. One of the first is Christopher Davis’s letter in issue #209. This was in reference to Eric Burns’s letter about the use of the magic jar spell to gain immortality. Mr. Davis says, “Apparently, the creature’s lifeforce remains in its body?”

I would like to direct Mr. Davis to the Player’s Handbook, page 169, the magic jar spell description. The book specifically states, “The lifeforce of the host (victim) is confined in the receptacle.” The spell description doesn’t say what would happen if the receptacle is destroyed while the caster is in the host’s body. The spell description in the Basic D&D® game says if the receptacle is destroyed while the caster is in the host’s body, then the host’s lifeforce is slain and the caster is stranded. This seems to apply to the AD&D game as well. With a new hit point total and with the spell-casting power the caster usually has, it would only be logical to destroy the receptacle and thus achieve a type of immortality, if that is what the caster wants. If a dispel magic spell was cast at the caster after the receptacle was destroyed, then it would be ineffective because there would be no receptacle to force the caster’s lifeforce back into. After a month in his new body, the caster of the magic jar should be familiar with the new body enough to adventure and go about his business.

Donald R. MacLean also gives a response to Mr. Burns’ letter in the same issue. He makes nine points that are valid if and only if the receptacle is intact. If the caster gains control of the victim, then he may destroy the receptacle to assure himself a stable host. He could then, if he wishes, cast another magic jar spell with a new receptacle to enter his old body. The caster could cast a flesh to stone spell on his former body to preserve it for later use.

Mr. Burns has one flaw in his thinking. He states that the spell lasts until the gem is destroyed. While this is true, it is beneficial to the caster to destroy the gem because it would make him a permanent resident in the host. Also, Mr. Burns says no one would want to be a lich. The lich is one of the most powerful creatures in the game. A mage would look pitiful fighting a lich, alone, of equal level. I use and encourage the use of Van Richten’s Guide to the Lich for use not only in the RAVENLOFT® setting, but also in other campaign settings. This makes the magic jar method of immortality like child’s play compared to the powerful undead method. For mages who don’t want to become undead, the magic jar method is the perfect immortality method.

I also would like to respond to David Shanahan’s letter in issue #210. Mr. Shanahan comments on the problem with people who don’t play by the rules. While I admit I have never seen much of a problem on the issue, Mr. Shanahan lumps power players into the same category as these rule breakers. I, along with the group I DM for, play the D&D game. Our PCs are extremely powerful, all at least 30th level and one 2nd-level Immortal. We didn’t get this way by giving millions of XP every adventure. We earned every point by the rules. I just want to make the point that not all power players fit Mr. Shanahan’s stereotype. Some of us adhere to the rules with a passion, but we keep the same characters for a long time and they become very powerful. I agree with Mr. Shanahan’s comments about outrageously high ability scores and powers that disrupt the game. One way to regulate scores and powers requires all PCs to start at 1st level and work their way up as far as they want. This way, the DM evolves the campaign world with the power of the PCs and maintains essential game balance. You don’t have to go by the rules for only your character if you are in a group of power players. The game is meant to entertain, so if you feel like it, play like it. Just have fun, because that’s what the game is about.

This is in response to Melody Alder’s letter in issue #210 stating that priest PCs are all but useless in combat. In stating that her priestess character is normally relegated to healing and protective roles, she is merely reinforcing the traditional stereotype that many gamers have regarding priest PCs.

All that is required here is a little creativity. This is easily done, especially if your DM allows your priest character to choose his spells at the time of casting. A priest has more than a few spells that can be useful in combat, even at low level. In a forest encounter, the first-level spell entangle can be used to great effect. If you’re fighting low-level opponents in metal armor, a couple of heat metal spells will literally roast your opponents alive (that’s 8d4 points of damage, folks)—and this is a mere second-level spell. There are also a few other second-level spells your priest character can use to smite havoc on the enemy. Flame blade, spiritual hammer, and hold person (which, by the way, is a third-level spell for a wizard) come to mind. Need to do something about that pesky mage in the opposing party? Silence, 15º radius should do nicely.

As you reach higher levels, you can make use of spells such as the various animal summoning spells, flame strike, wall of fire, and transmute rock to mud. And this doesn’t include the really powerful spells, such as blade barrier, conjure elemental, holy word, or creeping doom (500-1000 points of damage—show me a wizard spell that can do that).

The point of all this is that if you want your priest character to take a more active role in combat, he can do so, if he chooses his spells wisely. If your DM uses specialty priests in his campaign (as I do), you will, admittedly, be a bit more limited than a standard cleric with access to all sixteen spheres. You can remedy this problem, however, by specifying what type of spells you’d like your priest to have and asking your DM to make a list of which faiths have access to those spheres of influence.

With careful spell selection, you should be able to make your priest character the equal of any wizard. Sure, you can’t cast a fireball, but most priestly magic works in ways that are much more subtle and insidious, and in some cases more fun to play. I would encourage any player who wants to play a priest to consult with the DM beforehand so you can find out what she will and won’t allow, as well as get some feedback on whether the type of priest you want to play will work well in the campaign. The result may be well worth it, and the other players will be surprised by a priest who does much more than heal.

Simon Hawke pondered bloodlines and godly essence as he leaned back in a small room at TSR, Inc., crammed with role-playing games, board games, books, cookie crumbs, and lead miniatures. The author of nearly five dozen novels, Hawke left his sunny Arizona home behind for several inches of Lake Geneva snow and hours filled with kings, totem animals, noble sacrifices, and fomorian giants.

Hawke prides himself on his research, and his Wisconsin trip was to garner information about TSR's newest AD&D® game world—the BIRTHRIGHT™ campaign setting. Hawke, whose fourth DARK SUN® setting novel comes out in May, is penning the first BIRTHRIGHT saga, a 500-page paperback that will be released in time for the GEN CON® Game Fair.

The veteran science-fiction and fantasy author met with the creative team developing the world in which player characters start out as rulers who control various kingdoms. The more noble a character is, the stronger the blood of deities pulses within his body, and the more powerful he is.

"Are dwarves different here?" Hawke posed, as he pulled out a large notebook. He'd been eyeing a first-draft manuscript of the game and was armed with several dozen questions.

"They're of the earth," replied game editor Anne Brown. "Their flesh is dense. They're sturdy."

"What about elf voices? It says here they hold humans spellbound."

It was game designer Rich Baker's turn. "For whatever reason, elven lands are not for humans. There are no hard game effects to explain what happens. But humans are affected by time there. Time passes differently."

"What about halflings? They have the power to shadowwalk."

"In the BIRTHRIGHT campaign, a halfling can get to the spirit-world," Baker explained. "He can step out of the real world, walk in the spirit world, and reemerge into the real world somewhere else later."

"Halfling alibis are really difficult to corroborate," added book editor Rob King.

"And what about magic?"

"Real wizards in this world are rare," Baker said. "But they are powerful. People who are great sorcerers can take an entire kingdom and hide it away from the rest of the world for a hundred years."

"This sounds like fun," Hawke said, as he stared at preliminary sketches of beasties and a map that spread across a wide tabletop. "I'll play with it."

But the author admitted it wouldn't be easy. His BIRTHRIGHT novel will encompass 130,000 words—significantly more than any of his DARK SUN novels, which run about 90,000. The BIRTHRIGHT book will be Hawke's 59th novel.

After that he has plans for a FIRST QUEST™ book for younger readers.
The idea for the BIRTHRIGHT setting was born about a year and a half ago. Baker said TSR designers and editors were asked to propose a new world for the AD&D game. “There were 30-odd proposals,” Baker recalled. “Some were worlds ruled by intelligent dinosaurs, there was an underwater world of horrors. And there was a mountaintop world. It went back and forth for a week or more.” And several proposals were rejected, he added. “Then Tim Brown (director of creative services) recalled an idea about a world where the player characters started out ruling kingdoms. That was accepted, and now we need to figure out why a king would put himself in danger by adventuring.”

It was Hawke’s turn. “There were far more warrior kings in history than not. If you’re going to be a smart king, you’ll go out and lead your army to inspire loyalty.” Hawke should know. He is an avid history buff.

As Hawke finished the meeting, he said his goodbyes to the designers and editors and attempted to fit all the BIRTHRIGHT material into his briefcase. He relaxed for a few minutes, then agreed to chat about his experiences as a novelist.

His said his first book was published in the late 1970s, and his first eight novels were under the name Nicholas Yermakov. He was born Nikolai Valentinovitch Yermakov in New York City, a first-generation American. He changed his name because a) he wanted something readers could remember easily and not have trouble spelling. Since he was writing swashbuckling fiction, he chose a name that fit action characters he liked—The Saint’s Simon Templar, and Errol Flynn’s persona in The Sea Hawk. Hence, Simon Hawke was born.

Dozens of novels later, the name is firmly entrenched in bookstores across the country, and he has fans worldwide. “Apparently some people at TSR were reading my books,” he recalls. “Someone approached my agent and asked if I’d be interested in writing TSR books. I told them I didn’t really know much about role-playing games, and I asked them to send me some stuff.”

The stuff, Hawke said, was a crate of material into his briefcase. He relaxed for a week or more.” And several proposals were rejected, he added. “Then Tim Brown (director of creative services) recalled an idea about a world where the player characters started out ruling kingdoms. That was accepted, and now we need to figure out why a king would put himself in danger by adventuring.”

writing, and for me playing a game isn’t as much fun as writing a novel. You control everything with a novel, and with role-playing you’re sharing the creating.”

Hawke is confident he gets better with every book he writes, and his fans seem to concur. He receives a considerable amount of fan mail, and he makes it a point to try to answer every letter.

“At first I came up with a form letter, but then I found myself writing notes on the bottom of each letter, and the notes got longer. So I write individual letters now. But if the mail gets worse I’ll have to go back to some kind of form letter.”

He said the writers want to know how he got started in the business. Some ask him to review their manuscripts, and several offer praise about his DARK SUN books for TSR. “I can’t read their manuscripts,” he said, adding he has so little free time and when he reads, it is classics or friends’ published novels that he tends to pick off his numerous bookshelves.

In some of his spare time Hawke runs the Sonora Writer’s Workshop in Tucson, Arizona. Some of his students there are published authors or are close to breaking into the field. “I tell my students to watch people all the time. Writers have to be perpetual students of life and human nature.”

When he’s not writing or teaching, he enjoys pistol marksmanship, hiking in the desert, attending science-fiction conventions, adding on to his house, and riding his motorcycle. “I dearly love my motorcycle. It’s a Honda 750-four.” Hawke is a Civil War student, a fan of biographies, a gardener, and a collector of fantasy art and Indian jewelry.

Hawke also appreciates music. “I used to be a rock-and-roll musician. I was a drummer and I played guitar a little. I also worked as a DJ.” He recalls a professor asking if he wrote while listening to Mozart. “Most of the time I don’t work with music playing, I don’t want the distraction. But sometimes I’ll listen to music before I write—Stevie Ray Vaughn, AC/DC, Aerosmith, and I’ll run around the room playing air guitar. Then I’ll write. I’m also a neat-freak. My house has to be neat and in order before I can work. If I have dishes in the sink, I can’t write. I’m not as bad as Felix Unger, but I’m close. I’m compulsive.”

Hawke also is very busy. “In the past four years I’ve built a house, established and taught two writing classes, got a Master’s degree in English and History, and wrote 10 novels.”

Hawke said he has no regrets spending most of his time at a word processor. “George Burns said the key to long life is to fall in love with what you do, and I love what I do. For me writing is play time. And I think the secret to good writing is to go through life looking at everything with the eyes of a child. A child always asks why, and a writer asks what if. And based on that you get ideas all the time.”

His books for TSR include: The Outcast, The Seeker, The Nomad, and The Broken Blade, scheduled for a May release.
Robotech RPG Check List!

ROBOTECH RPG: Book One: Macross. A complete role-playing game that recounts the Robotech Defense Force’s valiant efforts to protect the Earth from the alien invaders known as the Zentraedi. Includes: Five different transformable Veritech Fighters, the famous RDF Destroids, Zentraedi Mecha, Lancer Space Cannon and Fighter, A.R.M.D. space platform, Macross characters, O.C.C.S., and the SDF-1. 112 pages, written by Kevin Siembieda and illustrated by Kevin Long. Over 120,000 copies sold! $11.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling.

ROBOTECH: Book Two: The RDF Manual. A 48 page source book with more data on the RDF and the world. Includes the floor plans of the Daedalus and Prometheus, plus additional aircraft, tanks, character sheets, a timeline, random encounters and optional hit location tables. 48 pages, written by Kevin Siembieda, with art by Kent Long and Peter Simon. $7.95 plus $1.00 for postage and handling.

ROBOTECH: Book Three: Zentraedi. Complete deck plans for the five giant Zentraedi space ships, more Zentraedi mecha and weapons, quick roll Zentraedi characters, character sheets and space combat rules. 48 pages, written by Kevin Siembieda. $7.95 plus $1.00 for postage and handling.

Kobold commotions

Though I seldom reflect on the doings of the smaller and nastier goblinkind, it seems that kobolds are on the move in at least two areas in Faerun. One lot is in the hills at the north end of the Troll Mountains, from whence they’ve been raiding caravans near Priapurl, and even barges near the north end of the Troll Mountains, Iriaebor! The other group seems to have taken up residence in some of the abandoned dwarf-holds in the peaks just west of Skull Crag, where they threaten both the western road into Cormyr and Tunland. Note to self: Hire or manipulate some adventuring bands into going up against them—and send Harpers to watch what befalls.

Traditionally, kobolds have been no more than a persistent nuisance. Though they are cunning, work very well together in battle—and have even more effective traps and tactics when defending their lairs or retreating across ground they prepared to entrap foes beforehand—they are simply too small, too magic-poor, and too ill-equipped to carve out kingdoms in the face of orc hordes, everpresent humans, and marauding monsters.

That’s the usual state of affairs, at least. These two latest kobold gatherings need investigating, if reports are correct. It seems that the kobolds have made a firm alliance with human spell-casters, that these (or someone else) has organized them into stable battle-groups with commanders who have the status of nobility, and their societies have a lasting structure, rather than the usual clan and tribe structure, with its constant feuding. This is a first for Faerun, at least since the time before Netheril, when (according to the writings of Thauthgras and other ancient sages) there were realms around the Moonsea ruled by kobold princes who traveled about on hippogriff and feywing steeds, and trained streges to serve as guardians and hunting packs.

There is no evidence (thus far, at least) of any remnants of such grandeur surviving down the years, although there was at least one kobold kingdom of importance, in what is now Murghom. In the Mountains of Copper one peak is called The Kobold Crown (a name now shared with a miners’ inn in the foothills at its base), because of a legend about the lost treasury of the kobolds that lies hidden in a cavern somewhere at its heart. This treasure, so the tales go, contains many stolen gold coins and human weapons bearing minor enchantments, and the like—but also includes a large, splendid crown of gems with considerable magic power.

Many fanciful tales surround this lost hoard and the human adventurers who’ve tried to find it. Often, the legends say, horrific guardian monsters slew and devoured them. I’ve my doubts about some of the gory details—sixteen levitating, fireball-hurling mind flayers seems a few more than necessary to guard one crown—but Jhahyndil of Rashemen (one of the most widely-traveled and experienced of the Witches) is convinced that more than one dragon has found a cleft high up in the Crown’s unscalled upper slopes, flown in to make its lair in the network of caverns within, and has been slain there by the crown’s, too, bears investigation, in (sigh) a few spare days of my time. Interestingly, there are no reports of kobolds active in the area today.

There are reports of kobolds swarming onto some of the smaller offshore islands just south of Altumbel—from what source, no one knows—slaughtering the few hermits and fisher-folk who dwell there, and turning the entire islands into their own farming communities. In such holds, as much fungis is grown in dirt chambers underground as is sown on the surface above. Kobold patrols are frequent (by ear-skiff as well as on land), and they set up wrecking operations. They have used lamps to lure ships onto rocks by night or in storms where such is feasible.

The isles of Thonn’s Fist, Brokenshores, and Altarn have been overrun in this way. Kobolds have been driven off the latter two, although deep mines they’ve dug on Altarn seem to connect with the Underdark, and it is likely they’ll return, or at least that something Fey will venture up from The Realms Below. The crumbling sea-keep and small harbor of Altarn have been abandoned, and lie empty today (unless pirates, undead, or something else has taken a fancy to the place). On Thonn’s Fist, the kobolds remain, having reportedly repulsed at least two pirate raids. Named for a huge granite height at the west end of the island (its ancient local human tribal name, Raunshee, translates as “club-head”), this island has been tunneled so extensively by the kobolds that there have been several surface collapses—at least one of which opened up the huge cavern used as a temple of Kur-tulmak to the sky. This crater is now a shallow rainwater lake, and is used by the kobolds as a reservoir; the temple has been relocated to deeper reaches of their warren of passages that also may connect with the Underdark.

Such small holdings, established through savage raids and often abandoned just as swiftly in the face of strong attacks, are the traditional dwellings of kobolds; there could be several hundred such in the Sword Coast North today, and even more in the mountains around the Bloodstone Lands. Little is known of these, but thus far Harper agents, fellow mages, adventurers, and my own explorations have turned up four especially large kobold groups known in the Sword Coast North right now:

- North of The Troll Hills dwells a tribe (name unknown) of about 800, led by Kholild Mrym. They have long harbored small caravans and lone travelers on The High Road, and were far more numerous before the recent fighting around Dragonspear Castle.
- In the mountains north of Ascore are The Drinn, about 3,700 strong, led by Olgloth Ryndrinn. They sometimes mount attacks on Citadel Adbar, and often slay miners in the Ice Mountains.
- At the west end of The Fell Pass, near the headwaters of the Goblintide River, dwell the Ulbrulik tribe, about 4,750 in number, led by the “Three Shes” (three matriarchs of unusual cunning and foresight). They are continually selecting a carefully-balanced roster of rival warleaders to serve under them, and have scored several important victories over human and orc forces in Khedrun Vale.¹ The Ulbrulik have plans to tunnel under the Lurkwood, and make it their home—but gnomes in the near Underdark report that duergar and illithids both have settlements in the area, and the kobolds’ plan has suffered some bloody setbacks.
- The Selgryn infest The Ice Lakes area north and east of Luskan, and have developed or adopted caltrops, pit traps, and spring-spears to deal with patrols from Luskan and prospectors alike. This tribe of about 2,900 was far larger, but has suffered heavy losses recently while virtually wiping out several Ubilgardt barbarian tribes that roamed the area. The chieftain, Ulag Selgryn, wears a stag’s head mask (with antlers) at all times in public, and possesses some magical items that he knows how to use.

RURAL KOBOLD WEAPONS AND ARMOR

Unlike their more "civilized" brethren who live near mankind, rural kobolds must make do with whatever they can find left behind in the wilderness, or build from their natural surroundings. Examples observed in the forests of Naugh East of Shaareach and west of the city of Rethmar.

This month, the sage takes a look at optional materials and settings for the AD&D® game and considers a few AD&D game basics before moving on to a quick look at the SPELLFIRE™ game.

I’m running a COUNCIL OF WYRMS™ campaign with five different types of dragon PCs. Several characters (the crystal, sapphire, and copper dragons) have gained enough experience to go up a level, while the rest (the gold and silver dragons) are still a long way from going up. The first group of players don’t want to wait for the required time to lapse and the second group wants harder adventures so they can get more experience. What can I do? Is there a way to speed up or slow down the characters’ advancement rates? Is the time requirement really necessary?

Yes, the time requirement is necessary—being a dragon isn’t easy. The simplest solution to your problem is to use the Player Character Sets rules (Book One, page 33). Let the players with dragons ready to go up levels temporarily retire their characters (or better yet become involved on dragon politics or other campaign business) and have those players use their kindred characters for adventures while the remaining dragons collect the experience and treasure they need to advance. There are other solutions, but how well they work depends on how competitive your players are. If your players are dedicated role-players, you simply can advance the campaign timeline a few decades or centuries whenever you feel the need and promote all the PCs to the next level.

Can tieflings, cambions, alu-fiends, githzerai, and other races from the PLANESCAPE™ setting choose character classes from the AL-QADIM® setting? I understand there might be some social and cultural barriers, I just want to know if it’s possible.

Planars who immigrate to Zakharra are limited to the various outlander kits, just as other non-Zakharans are. There’s no reason why second generation planar immigrants can’t choose native kits, assuming that the pervious generation took pains to become part of the society.

Are the optional individual experience awards and the individual class awards supposed to supplement the group experience award (DMG, pages 46-48) or replace it?

Actually, the individual class awards are optional, too, even though the blue box on page 48 ends at the bottom of the first column. Generally speaking, individual character awards should be given in addition to any group award, as these awards reflect superior play. An individual class award can be given in addition to the group award or instead of the group award, depending on how the DM feels about the situation. For example, a thief who steals back a bribe the party had to pay a dishonest guardsman probably should receive extra experience points for grabbing the money in addition to the group’s award for the whole adventure. On the other hand, a thief who gets the whole party in unnecessary trouble by picking on the wrong mark, but still manages to retain what she stole, might be given the bonus instead of a share in the group award.

Are racial saving throw bonuses cumulative with saving throw bonuses for high ability scores? For example, does a dwarf or gnome with a 17 Constitution and an 18 Wisdom receive a +8 to saving throw vs. spells?

Yes the bonuses are cumulative. However the dwarf in your example would receive the full +8 only against spells that affect the mind, such as charm person, because the +4 bonus from Wisdom only helps against mental attacks. Also remember that a roll of a 1 on the saving throw die is a failure.

Are psionics subject to planar alterations as spells are?

School alterations usually do not apply to psionics. Certain other special planar effects, however, still can apply if the DM wants them to. For example, the retribution effect for direct attacks on important tanar’ri in the Abyss probably should apply to all forms of psionics.

When calculating a creature’s experience value, what’s the hit die value modifier (DMG, page 47) for psionic abilities?

Add one hit die if the creature can employ only psionic devotions or add two hit dice if the creature can employ psionic sciences.

Do player characters need to have the read/write proficiency to use magical books, tomes, manuals, and librums? Do player characters need the read/write proficiency to use scrolls and spell books?

A character must be able to read to use any written magical item, including books and scrolls.

Technically, wizards and bards are not required to have the read/write proficiency, though many campaigns do require it as a house rule. Spell books are written in a sort of personal magical cipher, and illiterate characters can make up their own if they know how to cast spells. Note that read magic always gives the caster the ability to read a scroll, though the character might be categorically denied the use of the spell (no wizard can cast a priest spell from a scroll and vice versa). Likewise, thieves are not technically required to have the read/write proficiency to use their read languages skill (the skill itself is sufficient to unravel the mysteries of a written page if the character’s die roll succeeds) or to use scrolls at high level.

The spellcraft proficiency allows characters to recognize magical and magically endowed constructs. What, exactly, does this mean?

It means that the character knows a spell effect when he sees one. For example, a successful proficiency check would tell the character which wall in a room was created with a spell. The character would not know, however, if the magic involved was a wall of stone spell, an... illusory wall spell or something else entirely. Some DMs might allow the character to recognize magically constructed or animated creatures as well. For example, the character might be able to note a golem lurking in a row of normal statues or an animated table before it moves to the attack.

Spellcraft is not a substitute for a detect magic spell. It will not reveal magical items buried in a treasure hoard or allow the character to determine which spells have been cast upon a creature.

How does weapon specialization work with the eleven bladesinger kit?

Bladesinging is a form of weapon specialization available to elf fighter/mages. A bladesinger cannot specialize in a second weapon or double specialize in bladesinging.

How many miles does a berk have to walk to get from the spike under Sigil to one of the gate towns such as Curst or Plague Mort? Since the planes are infinite, what lies beyond these towns?

The exact distances are unrevealed, mostly because physical distances are pretty much meaningless in a setting where a cutter can find a gate leading just about anywhere. If you really have to know, the distance from the spire to any gate is probably at least 25,000 miles. Generally speaking, if a player character would even think of trying to walk the distance, you’ve made it too short.

Beyond the gate towns lie unexplored tracts of that plane. Exactly what such tracts contain is unrevealed, but they generally conform to the plane’s basic nature. In the Outlands, for example, the areas beyond the gate towns look pretty much like ordinary landscapes, though a traveler will find the occasional realm of a neutral power whose personality shapes the countryside. In a similar fashion, there also will be gates to other planes and the areas around those gates will reflect the nature of the plane the gate leads to.

SPELLFIRE™ game questions

How does the lightning bolt card (#332) work? Does the caster get the +5 level bonus and have the ability to destroy a magical item, too?

Yes, the spell allows the caster to get the +5 bonus and destroys one opposing ally of +4 or less or one opposing magical item.

When a card that says all attackers lose one level, do all the allies lose one level as well or do only champions suffer?

When the transformation (#201) event forces everyone to discard their cards, can the discarding people still play events before they get rid of their cards?

No. Once a card is played, all of its effects must be resolved before any other card is played. The only exceptions are cards that can negate the original card’s effects. For example, people could play Calm cards (#400) in response to a transformation and not have to throw away their hands, but nobody could throw down Fortunate Omens (#92) just to get it into play before discarding.

When multiple events are played, in what order do they take effect?

Events take effect in the order they are played. In a friendly game, that means the first person to reach for a card resolves that card first. In less friendly games, the first card that hits the table goes into effect. In either case, cards must be played and resolved one at a time, with the first card taking full effect before any other card play is considered.

Here’s a special note for groups inclined toward free-for-alls in which everyone throws cards: When a card hits the table and goes into play, everyone else is supposed to pick up any cards they tossed down. Players cannot reserve places in line for their cards by throwing them down when another card is taking effect.

GALACTIC PRISONERS
2440 AD - When expanding into space, humans encountered a vastly superior race, the Nibor. Because of the highly aggressive nature of humans, peace with the Nibor was not possible. The Nibor were forced to destroy all humans except for a very few.

Because of your character's unique personality, intelligence and leadership, the Nibor have selected him as the captain of an All Terrain Vehicle (ATV). He has been given a crew of 100 humans who were his fellow prisoners.

Galactic Prisoners is a unique, realistic, exciting, computer-modulated, futuristic, play-by-mail game. There are numerous avenues of play. Some characters will build walled forts or a vast labyrinth of tunnels. Some will establish colonies to increase production and income or will become warriors and take what they want from others by force. There will be much to explore and discover. Many different aliens will share this prison with humans. You are permitted to move as fast as once a week or as slowly as you like.

Send your check for $18.00 to receive the rulebook, setup and 4 turns. Subsequent turns will be $3.00 each. Any player who recruits a new player will be given two free turns. We offer discounts which would lower your price to as low as $2.64 per turn.

Science Fiction has changed a lot since journeys to the earth's core and homemade time machines. If Jules Verne were alive today he would be staggered by the wealth and depth of our science fiction. (That, and a lot of Geriatric specialists would want to take a look at him.)

In Verne's day, science fiction was considered frivolous by many of his literary peers. Nowadays, names like Asimov, Bradbury, and Heinlein are respected throughout known space. Sure, we've suffered through our share of Lost in Space and Spaceballs, but we've also been treated to the likes of Star Wars, Star Trek (in all its incarnations), and more recently, the film Stargate.

The technological advances evident in much of our fiction boggles the mind and continues Jules' tradition of imagination and creation. Writers explain these advances with a line of techno-babble, but who really cares about the explanation? It's the environment and genre that intrigue us, and the hi-tech equipment is an important part of all that. Who would have watched Star Wars if the heroes carried .38's and stilettos instead of blasters and lightsabers?

It's hardly surprising that our games have been influenced by SF books, movies, and TV shows. As a futuristic escape from our mundane, civilized world in which politically correct countries war only over such important issues as race and religion, they allow us to step into enlightened futures, or nightmares, through the theater of the mind.

Futuristic games also give us an excuse to acquire some really cool figures! Great miniatures sculptors labor tirelessly on incredible lines of SF figures in support of our games, and some of those appear in the following pages. Thanks to Alexander Bond of "The Master's Touch" in Los Angeles for painting some of these review figures.

Next time, we will focus on supernatural and magical creatures. If you have questions or comments, write: From The Forge, PO. Box 9, Murrieta CA 92562.

#0353 TITAN LEGIONS* game

Epic games series

Designer: Andy Chambers

Scale: Epic (6 mm)  cost: $59.99

Presentation: 10  Playability: 9  Value: 7

The latest addition to Games Workshop's addictive Epic games line, TITAN LEGIONS finally brings the Mega-Gargant and Imperator Titan to the field of battle. With the earth shaking and guns blazing, these machines of destruction will forever change the face of the epic-scale games.

From game box to rules to game templates, the TITAN LEGIONS set is thick with high-quality artwork, photography, and technical illustrations. In addition to the various books (there are three books including the rule book, the Codex Titanicus Imperial book, and the Fires of Gehenna scenario booklet), the game has 10 highly stylized card building (some Orc, some Imperial), numerous cards, counters, and weapon effect templates. As mentioned, the Imperator Titan makes its first appearance along with two Mega-Gargants, 12 Orc Bonebreka tanks, and 10 Imperial Knight Paladins.

The rule book tucks the TITAN LEGIONS game into the other science-fiction Epic game, SPACE MARINE* very well. There are no visible contradictions, which was the primary problem with the integration of the original ADEPTUS TITANICUS* (an incredible game) and the first edition of SPACE MARINE (which turned ADEPTUS into a patchwork quilt of contradictory, even paradoxical rules). I see no signs of paradox overload here.

While the possibility of an unstoppable force of Imperators or Mega-Gargants exists, the rules give these monstrities of mayhem the necessary Achilles' heels. In addition to a high cost, either or both may be boarded, and both have limitations on their firepower. While the Orcs are at a definite disadvantage, with their lack of organizational skills and rudimentary command and control chains, they also are less costly to field in larger forces which, hopefully, will compensate.

The rule book contains experience rules for titan crews and the Codex book gives us a glimpse into the dark recesses of the Imperium with more highly detailed background.

The plastic models require significant assembly, but GW has provided instructions that allow even a novice to put them together with ease. I would suggest that the models be trimmed, prepped, and painted prior to assembly, as they become more difficult to paint after assembly.

Overall, I'd have to say that the TITAN LEGIONS game is Games Workshop's best release since the WARHAMMER 40K* game. While the price tag is high, you get about $40 worth of plastic models so the rules, templates, counters, and scenarios are a deal.

#0155 Codex Eldar
#0156 Codex Orks
Authors: Rick Priestley/Jervis Johnson
Scale: 28 mm  cost: $20.00
Presentation: 10  Playability: 9
Value: 6

Details and background information for WARHAMMER 40K Eldar and Orks abound in these Codex books. Both are presented with stunning color and copious amounts of the incredible artwork that Games Workshop has become known for.

Codex Eldar provides information on the origins of the various Aspects, Harlequin, and the psychic powers at which the Eldar are so adept. Further details include Warlocks, Farseers, scouts, pirates, and their spirit-driven machines of destruction. A full-color insert gives some paint schemes for your Eldar troops as well as force cards and additional wargear cards.

Explanations of all the Eldar weaponry, fully pointed troop lists, and a selection of special characters complete the book.

Codex Orks, focusing on the true power of the universe (can you tell which army I run?), details the various Ork clans, their strange (and sometimes functional) weapons of destruction, and troop types from Kommandos to Warhounds. The color section gives color schemes and additional wargear cards that are race specific.

The army list, with appropriate point cost information, numerous special characters, and some Orc tactics put the finishing touches on the Codex. The armies are well balanced, even with Psyker rules that are different for each race. One of the great things about the 40K game is that the races are so distinctive and detailed, they don't blend together in the rules or on the table-top.

#9102 Zodgrod Wortsnagga
#8082 Jain Zar
#8082 Maugan Ra
WARHAMMER 40K* line
Sculptors: Alan Perry/Jes Goodwin
Scale: 28 mm  Cost: $7.99 each
Technical: 8  Artistic: 9
Value: 5

Three powerful leaders for the WARHAMMER 40K game, Zodgrod is a formidable special character from the Codex Orks while Jain Zar and Maugan Ra are Phoenix Lords from Codex Eldar.

Zodgrod and Jain Zar are very clean casts with only the slightest of parting lines. The only visible line on Jain Zar was inside the curl of her loccloth. Maugan Ra has a slight line across his head and shoulders. All three require a minimal amount of assembly.

Zodgrod is a masterpiece of rough detail work, from cloth wrapped feet to kustom bolter to mechanical Runtherd Grabba-Stikk. When going into battle he leads his specially trained super snotlings.

One of the most elegant pieces I've seen in a while, Jain Zar is detailed to highlight her graceful curves and sharp lines. Many of the proportions and dimensions have been exaggerated in a stylized way, such as the hair, the knee-high boots, and the length of her feet.

Maugan Ra, the last of his craftworld, is hideously attired for his role on the battlefield. With mechanical support for his heavy weapon, highly stylized armor and shoulder pads, and a backpack apparently built of vertebrae, his presence wouldn't be missed at most parties.

The price is noticeably high for a single figure, but these are far from standard fare. Considering the beauty and charisma of these figures (can I use "charisma" when referring to an ork?), I have to admit that they're worth the price tag of $7.99 apiece. Painting by Ken Carpenter

#2101 Tudor Inn
Wild Walls series
Scale: 25 mm  Cost: $6.00
Technical: 5  Artistic: 7
Value: 7

I just happened to run into this strange lot of science-fiction fanatics in the miniatures room at the GEN CON® Game Fair. They were surrounded with all sorts of SF paraphernalia and some really extravagant... dioramas. Turns out they make VACU-form walls and structures.

While, as their name implies, they make a lot of SF settings, they also make some dungeon, castle, and medieval village sets. This Tudor Inn is an excellent example of their village sets.

As I mentioned, these are made of plastic sheets that have been formed to a desired shape. They won’t hold up to a lot of rough treatment, but a little care will preserve them for . . . what’s the half-life of plastic? About eight millennia?

For the material and price, the level of detail is very good. The inside of the mold is actually more detailed, because of the nature of VACU-form, but much of it comes through. The inn has a shake roof, plus daub and wattle exterior with heavy beams to reinforce it at certain points.

Instructions detail the necessary trimming and priming before you paint.

#1575 Kill Zone game
FUTURE WARRIORS® line
Author: Nick Lund
Scale: 25 mm Cost: $24.95
Presentation: 7 Playability: 9
Value: 9

For months we’ve been seeing the FUTURE WARRIORS blisters, hoping that a game system for them was just around the corner. Well it’s here, and you’re going to love it.

Coming in a full-color sleeve, the boxed set boasts 10 of the incredible figures we’ve come to expect from this line, including five that are sold only with the game. The booklet is pretty plain, but the rules are what’s important. There is also a sheet of counters and a Quick Reference sheet.

While the figures are reminiscent of the Mad Max setting, the game itself doesn’t capitalize on the potential background as yet. However, the feel is different from any miniatures game you’ve ever played. Movement and firing is based on orders you assign at the end of the previous turn, so you have to count on calculated risk and gut instinct to survive. This method creates a tension and you-against-the-world feel, living up to the by-line “Rules for Futuristic Shoot Outs.”

Mechanics are pretty simple and require only six-sided dice. Hand-to-hand combat is an original system that’s both fast and deadly. Ranged combat is quick, but the game gives the defender (target) the benefit of the doubt. In a game designed for only a dozen or so models on each side, leaning toward the defender allows the game to last longer than 15 minutes.

I have to admit, I was a fan before the game came out because I was so intrigued by the figures, but the game was worth the wait. There’s supposed to be a scenario booklet out this quarter, so look around for it.

#1524 Satellite Team
#1530 Rebel Women
FUTURE WARRIORS® line
Sculptor: Mark Copplestone
Scale: 28 mm Cost: $4.00 each
Technical: 7 Artistic: 8 Value: 8

Now that we’ve got the game, let’s look at more of the great figures that have been released for it. These two blisters provide more troopers and rebels, not that you’d invite them both to the same party.

Minor parting lines can be found along the legs and arms, but they should clean up easily. A tiny amount of sheeting lies in the crook of the satellite controller’s left arm—an easy fix for hobby knife and file.

The troopers are heavily embellished with armor studs, buckles, pockets, utility belts, and other gizmos. They also are equipped with military assault rifles (the kind you always see on the news), sidearms, and communications headsets. With the satellite team comes a small satellite communications station.

The rebel women have boots, heavy pants, assault weaponry, and other assorted details. All of the figures have excellent features and realistic expressions, allowing for incredible results with the right paint job.

Painting by Ken Carpenter
Incredibly ambitious figures, both the Mark III and Centurion were designed by Tom Frank and sculpted by Dave Summers. These beasts of electronics and metal will terrorize your LEGIONS OF STEEL game players! The Mark III is a huge, metal piece weighing in at nearly a 1/4 pound, and one of the most powerful predators in the game, while the Centurion's level of detail is unreal.

There are visible parting lines and areas of flash, but clean-up isn't too bad. Assembly is required, but the sculptor was careful to make sure the pieces fit well and assemble easily. A little fit work will be required to get the Mark III's lower-right hand cradled in its left hand. On the Centurion's right shoulder are two miniature demons, but their feet didn't fill all the way. A small bit of putty work will rectify that.

Previous Assault Fiends have been impressive, but the Mark III is incredible. Four armed miniatures often look awkward and clumsy, but this piece is well proportioned and built to minimize the customary strangeness. Its head is creatively sculpted with a mix of smooth curves and sharp angles. An action stance gives the figure great motion and life while the detail of his weapons, torso, and limbs will satisfy the most demanding of miniatures fanatics.

Centurions are vicious predators with the intellect to command larger units of lesser machines. Highly stylized sculpting and fine detail make this model a centerpiece of your LOS forces. The “armor” and weapons are very well done, as are the torso and face. The “spear” is actually a very effective area of effect weapon given a spear shape to allow greater casting distance. This is also the first LOS model to use the Heavy Deadbolt or Blitzer, another surprise for your overconfident UNE rivals.

LOS players will want the Mark III and Centurion models so they can mop up those UNE troops, but painters, modelers, and collectors will want them because they’re such great figures. Painting by Ken Carpenter

#3421 War Leader in Diamond PBA
#3440 Volcano B.A.P.
LEGIONS OF STEEL line
Sculptor: Dave Summers
Scale: 28 mm cost: $4.95/$12.95
Technical: 6 Artistic: 7
Value: 5

Among the leading releases for the Infranite race, these figures are a couple of the race’s most able fighters.

Both show minor parting lines, and there are a few small areas of flash or heavy vent threads, but the size of the Volcano required that the figure have adequate flow of metal through the channels. Clean up isn’t too bad, and the figures look great when you’re done.

The War Leader, with Tempest assault rifle, grenade launcher, rocket pod, and grenades, is a formidable command figure, and one of the best unit leaders in the game. The detail of his powered battle armor is good, especially the pack and mid-section. His rifle and shoulder mounted rocket pod also are highly detailed.

Volcanos are an ominous sight on the battlefield. With high-powered weaponry, only a strong force can stand up to one. Detail includes organic-looking tentacles and texture over the torso while the rest is very well sculpted, powered machinery. The figure stands about two inches tall and weighs in at about 1/4 pound.

#1690 BattleTech Compendium
BATTLETECH* series
Scale: 1/285th cost: $20.00
Presentation: 9 Playability: 10
Value: 9

The most recent revision to the classic BATTLETECH miniatures game, “The Rules of Warfare” clears up the last few questions within the greatest rules system of its kind.

Replete with good to excellent artwork and compelling background material, the newest Compendium involves you in the life and death struggle of the Inner Sphere. Two sections of full-cover, glossy pages present incredible computer graphics of mechs in action as well as the BATTLETECH Miniatures Conversion rules, written by Bryan LiBrandi and Chuck Crane.

Some of the more important rules clarifications address standing (and falling), multiple piloting skill rolls in a single phase, transferring damage, and others. The clarifications don’t seem to change many of these rules so much as spell them out in a clear and concise way.

The BATTLETECH game, from the very beginning, was an absorbing game but the incredible history and time-line that FASA has created, with the help of writers like Michael A. Stackpole, turned a great game into an epic, living universe. The BATTLETECH game is a must-play miniatures game for beginners and experts alike.

#1685 Tukayyid Scenario Pack
BATTLETECH* series
Author: Jeffrey Layton
Scale: 1/285th cost: $12.00
Presentation: 8 Playability: 9
Value: 8

The Tukayyid Scenario Pack allows you to play through some of the historic confrontations of the battle for Tukayyid, as either the Com Guard forces or one of the many Clans that participated in the battle. Art throughout the book ranges from merely adequate to exceptional. However, couching the scenarios in the storyline of Tukayyid, detailing each Clan’s success or folly as well as the Com Guard response, drags you, willing or not, into the plot and makes you want to play it out—right now.

Most of the scenarios are fairly balanced and designed to allow either or both sides to claim some margin of victory, dependent upon the outcome. Those battles that appear to be somewhat lopsided depend on a quick wit and a strict adherence to the mission’s objective to allow players to snatch victory from the jaws of defeat.

Included are 27 scenarios, background material on the confrontations, special rules to help you create forces, and numerous ‘mech sheets for special configurations or newer designs. Tukayyid will keep you fighting it out for nearly as long as the actual ‘battle’ lasted!

BATTLETECH line
Sculptors: Jeff Wilhelm/Dave Summers
Scale: 1/285th Cost: $7.25/$6.00
Technical: 5 Artistic: 8 Value: 6

Aside from packing a solid gaming punch, the Tempest is a model of sharp lines, crisp detail, and exciting design. Painting will be a pleasure, though you need to expect a good deal of detail work to bring out all of the highlights. Painting by Alexander Bond

#20-537 Minotaur & Satyr
#20-574 Shamans (M & F)

SHADOWRUN line
Sculptor: Jim Johnson/Dave Summers
Scale: 25 mm Cost: $6.00/$4.00
Technical: 7 Artistic: 8 Value: 8

The Satyr is rather traditional, though very well done. It boasts furred legs and hairy mane that are both highly detailed, and Jim has spared us the stereotypical genitalia (thank you!). Definitely not stereotypical, the Minotaur is quite the eye catcher. With a bovine head that has vaguely humanoid features, a heavy mane, and the oddly muscled, fur-patched body of a bull, this figure is a piece of art. Both figures have life-like stances and great proportions.

Dave's shamans also are incredibly proportioned and poised for action, but the detail here is different. While the beasts were sculptures of muscle and feature, the shamans appear in ceremonial garb that has been detailed to the finest article of clothing and accessory.

The male has a medicine pouch, bandoliers, tasseled shoulder pads, and a leather holster. Feathers adorn his wild hair and his knee-high moccasins appear mismatched. The female wears a long coat with padded mantles over her shoulders. The coat is open, revealing a short, tasseled top that exposes her midriff, chains about her thighs, and knee-high moccasins.

The female seems about to thrust her dagger into a doll charm. I'm sure the doll's uncanny resemblance to myself is just a coincidence, although I have had this shooting pain.

The FULL THRUST game is simple enough that beginners can learn the basics of miniatures gaming, but it also can be complex enough to interest and entertain.
the most experienced table-top gamer. This is a great space combat simulation in simple game terms that opens up options that aren’t available unless you’re playing a table-top game. It plays fast and is a whole lot of fun.

#MORET More Thrust
Editor: Jon Tuffley
Scale: 1/2000th cost: $12.00
Presentation: 7 Playability: 9 Value: 8

A supplement for the FULL THRUST rules, More Thrust provides more options, more power, and more fun. Using the same format as its parent system, the book is easy to understand and entertaining to read. More Thrust presents expanded rules for fighters, giving specialized function fighters and elite/raw pilot modifiers. There also are optional rules to limit the effectiveness of fighters, restricting a potential imbalance, since a player using a lot of fighters could gain an advantage. Additional rules for stationary installations, sensors, and planetary bodies expand rules to add more flavor and a greater sense of realism to the game. A couple of alien races make their appearance, as GZG provides an environment for those players who wish to use it. With the races come new weapons, hulls, and philosophies. The book includes three scenarios, numerous scenario ideas and rules for combining the FULL THRUST rules with a couple ground combat games. If you like FULL THRUST, then More Thrust is a must. (No Dr. Seuss-like poetry intended).

Best of Show
Gamer’s BoS has been narrowed to two figures—Games Workshop’s Jain Zar for the 40K game and Global Games’ Centurion for the LEGIONS OF STEEL game. Jain Zar is a sleek, elegant piece of work with as much grace as you can pack into a 28-mm miniature. The Centurion is the ultimate example of extreme detailing. Every surface, nook, and angle has been intricately carved and fashioned to make this a startling figure for ambitious painters. Modeler’s BoS has to be Global’s Mark III Assault Fiend. There wasn’t much competition this time, but this one would stand out in any crowd. The Mark III has an overwhelming presence, either on the battlefield or on display.
